"By the concession agreed to between the parties, the concessionnaires should form a company within six months, concessionnaires should form a company within six months, with a capital of not less than £1,000,000, £150,000 to be subscribed, and £75,000 to be paid. In the event of such terms being complied with, it was lawful for the concessionnaires to transfer to such company the benefit of the concession. It is clear that before the concession the following were the conditions precedent:—(a) A company with a capital not less than £1,000,000; (b) a subscription share capital of £150,000; (c) actual paid-up capital of £75,000. Until and unless these conditions were complied with the concession. unless these conditions were complied with, the concession-naires could not transfer the right to any intended company."

INDIA.

CALCUTTA, APRIL 29.

A meeting of about 400 of the leading Parsee bankers and citizens of Lucknow has been held at the Hosainabad Baradari in order to disclaim any sympathy with the movement of the so-called "National Congresses." The Rajah of Bhinga was voted to the chair. At his request Pundit Sri Kishen Rai Bahadur, vice-chairman of the Lucknow Municipal Council, explained the object of the meeting. The speaker criticised the resolutions of the last Madras Congress, attacked the pretensions of the self-constituted delegates to represent the country, and exposed the absurdity of agitating for a repeal of the Arms Act and the remodelling of Legislative Councils on the representative principle. In conclusion, he said that on the representative principle. In conclusion, he said that the country was not ripe for the elective system, and if that were prematurely adopted it would as surely fail as it had failed in ancient times in Greece, in more modern times failed in ancient times in Greece, in more modern times in France in the days of the first Napoleon, and, coming to the present time, as it was even now in danger of failing at the hands of General Boulanger. "Our friends of the Congress," he continued, "want to arm the country, as they allege, to ward off the attacks of Russia, if ever they should be made." But, in his opinion, they were themselves attempting to create a more mischievous foe in the heart of India. The learned Pundit preved to God to ever the day, but maintained that if Pundit prayed to God to avert the day, but maintained that if ever the peace and order of this vast country should be disturbed by the agitation no one would be more responsible and culpable before God and man than such demagogues as Bannerji and Tyabji and their kind, with their preposterous schemes of arming the whole country. The following resolution was unanimously adopted:—

"That the members of this meeting fully rely on the justice of the British Government, and have no sympathy whatever with the movement of the so-called 'National Congress.'"

A meeting in favour of the Congress was recently held in Meerut, at which an address was delivered by a native statutory member of the Civil Service in support of the objects of the Congress. In the course of the discussion the Mahomedan speakers objected to the resolutions, stating that the Mahomedans were opposed to the Congress, and endorsed the political convictions and principles of Sir Syud Ahmed Khan.

Holkar's Minister, Raghunath Rao, has retired from Indore. In consequence of persistent maladministration his position had become intolerable. The Pioneer, commenting on Holkar's misgovernment, says:

"By placing trust in intriguing astrologers and worthless favourites the Maharajah has alienated the one man who honestly desired his welfare, and now stands in a critical position. The maladministration of Indore is too notorious to be allowed to proceed. Reform from within is hopeless. The Government must interfere and reform the abuses."

The Calcutta health officer, a very able and energetic sanitary expert, has written a strong report on the insanitary condition of a portion of Calcutta. Much improvement is needed before the Calcutta Conservancy for the northern portion of the town will deserve better treatment than that lately given to it in a public print, wherein it was stated that the condition of Calcutta resembled that of an African village. This has greatly offended the acute susceptibilities of the Native Commissioners and those officials who pander to their vanity and prejudices, and the health officer has been solemnly called upon by a formal resolution to explain away or withdraw his description of them as discourteous and disrespectful. It is becoming very difficult for independent persons to accept municipal employment and honestly to do their duty to the public, although questions of sanitation vitally affect the whole community. Cholera is spreading in Cashmere. Two hundred and fifty cases, with ninety-three deaths, are reported. The ex-Minister Luchman Dass intends to visit England shortly.

AFGHANISTAN.

CALCUTTA, APRIL 29.

The Ameer is stated to have ordered his Commander-in-Chief to conduct an expedition against those Bajour chiefs who decline to recognise his authority. The Ameer has left Jellalabad for Cabul.

The construction of a broad-guage line between Hirokh and the Kotul in the Bolan Pass is making great progress, and trains will, it is expected, run shortly from Quetta to Sibi via the Bolan.

Sir R. Sandeman has returned to Quetta. He has suffered considerably in consequence of a fall from his horse.

SIKKIM.

CALCUTTA, APRIL 29.

There is no news of importance from Sikkim, but it is stated that there is apparent a marked revival of confidence in the patriotic party since a post was fortified at Gnatong. The Rajah remains at Nitchi. It is hoped that the influence of the new Commissioner sent by China to Lhassa will destroy the aggressive and ambitious policy of the Tibetan Lamas. It is expected that he will arrive at his post in about a fortnight.

BOMBAY DEFENCES.

(Times of India.)

We have always contended that the proper defence for the harbour of Bombay lay in the mounting of three or four really heavy armour-piercing guns of the largest size, and not in a number of only moderately powerful ordnance, and our contention is borne out by the wonderful results of the latest Italian gun, the 118-ton breech-loader. This powerful weapon throws a shot a ton in weight, which can penetrate 29 inches of iron armour at a range of a mile, and as much as 36 inches of armour at a range of 150 yards. The latter penetration is possible for defining as a reason would result a range of 150 yards. useless for defence, as no vessel would come anything like as close as that, but it is quite possible that the fortune of war would bring an attacking line-of-battle ship within a mile of a properly placed battery, while a range of two or three miles would be quite on the cards, and nothing could force the entrance to Bombay harbour without coming well within that range. The armour of the most heavily-plated foreign armour of the graph of the Transit of the property of th range. The armour of the most nearly-plated foreign armourclads, such as the Terrible and the Requin, is only 20 inches, and this thickness would be no proof against the 118-ton gun at a two-mile range. Its shot could, moreover, penetrate 12 inches of armour at a distance of three miles, and 12 inches is the limit of the armour on all but the newest and heaviest line-of-battle ships, and of the new belted cruisers which would probably be employed in any serious attempt on Bombay.
Three or four guns of this kind, advantageously disposed and properly protected, could destroy any ship that is likely to properly protected, could destroy any ship that is likely to attack Bombay before their own guns could do much damage to the works on shore, and could absolutely prevent any attempt to carry the harbour even by the most powerful of modern armour clads.

LOWER BURMA. (Times of India.)

The report on the administration of Lower Burma, during the year 1886-87, shows a serious disturbance in the affairs of that province. There was a great increase in the prevalence of violent crime, the rise being as high as 100 per cent. So numerous were the cases of serious offences that the Courts of Sessions were unable to dispose of them with the customary promptitude. The state of matters is made evident by the following sentence:—The number of severe punishments increased; sentences of transportation rose from 153 to 1,504; sentences of imprisonment for more than seven years rose from 32 to 78; sentences of death from 62 to 66; appeals to the Superior Courts increased largely, from 505 to 1,954. The jails were overcrowded, and the pressure had to be relieved by the transfer to India and the Andaman Island of 1,898 convicts. The prison death-rate rose from 42 to 61 per thousand, a curious fact being that 52 per cent. of the deaths occurred among prisoners who had been less than six months in jail, this unfortunate result being due partly to overcrowding, and partly to the sickly state of newly-admitted prisoners. Stagnation in trade caused a heavy fall in the number of registrations. The year's harvest was good throughout the province, but the work of the Forest Department was impeded by the disturbances in Upper Burma, the depression in the timber trade with Europe else continuing during the year. also continuing during the year. A number of fires were caused by dacoits. The average value of the teak exported to Europe was £6.7. The shipping employed in the trade of the province increased by 30,000 tons, the aggregate sea-borne trade of the province rising by about £300,000. Exports, however, declined, and the increase in the imports was largely due to the military force employed in Upper Burma. The gross revenue was £2,439,082, an increase of £57,967 over that of the previous year. Land revenue, salt, excise, and customs provided larger estimates than were anticipated. The number of schools in the province fell from 5,234 to 5,046, and the number of pupils from 156,066 to 112,603. These are the salient points of the report.

THE ENHANCED SALT DUTY. (Bombay Gazette.)

The memorial of the Poona Sarvajanik Sabha on the enhancement of the salt duty leaves little or nothing to be said on the subject. It goes farther than the Bombay Presidency Association went in indicating how the necessity for increasing taxation went in indicating how the necessity for increasing taxation might have been avoided. Not in avoiding extravagance in military expenditure alone, but in spending less on ordinary public works should a financial equilibrium have been sought for. And, again, if deficit there must be, why not meet it, as some members of the Bombay Chamber of Commerce have urged that it ought to be met, by a loan—say, in the form of short terminable annuities? Herein we do not think the Poona Association has given good advice or say, in the form of short terminable annuities? Herein we do not think the Poona Association has given good advice, at all events, that takes due account of the financial contingencies of the near future. This is just the kind of pressure that popular opinion might be expected to bring to bear upon a Government in financial matters, for popular opinion seldom looks far ahead; it thinks more of the present than of the future, and it will not make sacrifices; either of financial principle or for any financial contingencies that are at all remote. We regard this part of the memorial as a regrettable feature in a document which is in other respects grettable feature in a document which is in other respects admirable, and as somewhat reducing the force of its inference, in favour of an enlargement of the Legislative Councils from the fact that the additional Members of Council on a recent occasion so inaccurately and inadequately represented public opinion about the salt duty. That is the right inference, but it would be regrettable if unsound teaching on the council of finance were to go forth in country. on the canons of finance were to go forth in company with arguments, in themselves legitimate, for a fuller representation of public opinion in legislative bodies. The financial and economic faith of the Sabha is not free from suspicion. It was in its journal that the declaration was plainly suspicion. It was in its journal that the declaration was plainly made that representative government in India, provided it meant an effective control over commercial policy, would ineviably lead to protection against foreign goods and its advocacy now of the short and easy, but impolitic method of borrowing to overcome difficulties which may any day recur is not reassuring. However, taking the memorial as a whole, it is exceedingly able, and it will, in combination with the Presidency Association memorial on the orbital contract the Commercial on the orbital contract. ciation memorial on the subject, satisfy the Government that there is a Native opinion on this side of India which deserves to be taken into careful account.

ORIENTALISING THE PUBLIC SERVICE. (Englishman.)

Taking up at haphazard the Civil Service gradation list for July, 1886, it suggests some interesting reflections when collated with the proposals of the Public Service Commission. Then with the proposals of the Public Service Commission. Then there were 243 Civilians on the list excluding those employed in Burma, and including those appointed by statute, who generally hold, among others, the following appointments: Eight Commissionerships, 39 Magistracies, 35 Joint Magistracies, 93 Assistant Magistracies, and 28 Judgeships, besides five appointments in the High Court, the Registrarship, the Legal Remembrancers' post, two Judicial Officers in Chota Nagpur and Assam, two seats in the Board of Revenue, and 12 Secretariat appointments. In addition to these there are miscellaneous posts, such as those of the these there are miscellaneous posts, such as those of the Collector of Customs, the Commissioner of Police, the Inspector-General of Registration, three officers in the Financial Department, the Lieutenant-Governorships, and a seat in the Supreme Council. Appointments not universally or properly held by Civilians have been omitted, as well as twenty in the Assam Commission. An average has also been struck of the Secretariat posts in the Government of India usually held by Bengal Civilians. Roughly, the present suggestion is to take away two Under-Secretaryships of the Supreme Government, three of the Local Government, one Accountant-Generalship, one Judicial Commissionership, one seat in the Board of Revenue one of the Secretaries one Commissionership four Revenue, one of the Secretaries, one Commissionership, four Magistracies, six Joint Magistracies, and 19 Assistant Magistracies (allowing for Assam). In all about 42 appointments, or about 20 per cent. of the whole, will be open to indigenous agency.

Nothing like this number however, can be foisted on the country except after a considerable lapse of time. The age fixed under the Provincial Service rules will be 25, and a young Native of that age cannot be pitched into the responsible position of a District Magistrate or Judge over the heads of men tion of a District Magistrate or Judge over the heads of men of superior abilities and better claims merely on the score of his nationality. He will have to enter at the lowest grade, and as it will take at least one year before the rules can be altered, and another to settle the scheme of admission, it may safely bepredicted that those at present in the service have little to fear from the competition of the Provincials. The most that is likely is that a few of the junior Civilians may be passed over for the Under-Secretaryships in favour of Natives devoid of experience, or any qualification but that of colour. Those who have already elected the judicial line have some reason for apprehension. English Barristers are not likely to accept mufassal Judgeships on 1,200 or 1,500 rupees a month—the probable salary—and therefore the class peculiarly needed to leaven the ranks and introduce a more thorough knowledge of law will not be represented, but a few appointments will doubtless be given to pushing pleaders who have friends in the vernacular Press. Inasmuchas fewer Civilians will be appointed to the High Court, this branch of the Service will find their predicted that those at present in the service have little to fear from the competition of the Provincials. The most that is vernacular Press. Inasmuchas fewer Civilians will be appointed to the High Court, this branch of the Service will find their legitimate channels of promotion choked at both ends. Still those already in the Service may regard their position as sufficiently secure, thanks, not to the recommendations of the Commission, but to the inevitably slow action of time; they may, indeed, console themselves with the reflection that they will be little troubled with the competition of their juniors. To quote Horace, "Micat inter omnes Julium sidus, velut inter ignes Luna minores.

But to pass from all these details, which are chiefly of interest to a few, the question of the future government of India should be faced, and to do this we must look fifteen years Assuming that the age limit for Natives be prolonged to twenty three, and that the marks for Arabic and Sanskrit. be raised, the result will be striking. At present few Natives present themselves before the examiner in England, partly on account of the aged fixed, partly owing to caste prejudices, and partly owing to the stiffness of the test, which renders the advantage of turning adrift a young babu far from home and far from restraint extremely remote. Now at a stroke two of these obstacles will be removed, and their absence reacting or the second growing continuously weaker through the gradual these obstactes will be removed, and their absence reacting on: the second, growing continuously weaker through the gradual disruption of caste effected by time, will cause its total disappearance. Sens, Mozumdars, Deys, Guptas, and Dutts will head the van, orthodox Brahmins will not take long to follow, and the year 1900 will see Mr. Datt Deway Demany Ghose, of a recent political squib, the Accountant-General of Bengal. No care has been taken by the Commissioners to insert provisions by which antecedent residence in England will be compulsory, further than to pass an examination absurdly easy to men of twenty-three, who will appear five times for examination in subjects, three of which, Sanskrit, Arabic, and Mathematics, are the most highly marked, and familiar to them from their earliest boyhood. To return to figures, of the present Service and Statutory Civilians and five transparents of the present services. the most righty marked, and raminar to tuem from them earliest boyhood. To return to figures, of the present Service ten Natives are Statutory Civilians, and five are successful at the open competition. To these we may add five men who will enter by one or other of these avenues before the new proposals operate, and say twenty-four who will be appointed to the Provincial Service out of the maximum of 48, in all about 44. We may put down the annual number of appointments thrown open yearly in England as twenty (not more, as the Proivncial Service absorbs many). Of these about ten are likely to be Natives, and of theten aboutseven are likely to come to Bengal. If we calculate up to fifteen years hence, of which thirteen will be under this system, the total number recruited for Bengal comes to no less than 91, from which we may deduct three for casualties. The total number of Natives will then be 132, or, roughly, three-fifths of the entire Service. It is singular that not a note of alarm has been sounded in the face of changes far transcending the provisions of the Ilbert Bill, and threatening to completely orientalize the Government of England's largest dependency.

THE PEOPLE OF SIKKIM. (Madras Mail.)

The population of Sikkim and of the Darjeeling hills may be broadly divided into three nationalities; the Lepchas, or be broadly divided into three nationalities; the Lepchas, or aborigines of the country; the Nepalese immigrants, who have settled in the country in such numbers as to form nearly one-half the entire population; and the Bhuteas, or Bhutanese. The last-named are pure Tartars, and are hardly distinguishable from the Tibetans. The cut and fashion of their hats, clothes, and boots are Chinese; they wear pigtails, and their language sounds something like Turkish. They apparently daries their name from the country of Bhutan lying to the derive their name from the country of Bhutan, lying to the east of Sikkim, but there are many domiciled in Sikkim itself and about Darjeeling, and it is supposed that the race originally came from Tibet. They are a tall, large-boned race, very different to the diminutive Goorkhas and Lepchas, and they are strong and hardy, but are accused of being lazy. They live in villages mostly by themselves, have their Buddhist temples, and erect long poles round their houses, with paper streamers on which are printed prayers in Chinese-looking characters. on which are printed prayers in Chinese-looking characters. They may often be met going along the road twirling their praying-wheels—cylinders of brass or copper (sometimes of silver), with a printed roll of prayer inside, and small weights attached to make it revolve by itself, when once set a-swinging. Polyandry is supposed to prevail among them, at all events it certainly does among the Tibetans. The Bhutca women are large and coarse featured; they wear thick woollen clothes of bright colours, and many massive ornaments of gold and silver. Some of them smear their faces with a brown unguent, which makes them look as if they had a coating of French polish, and certainly does not improve their not very attractive appearance. The Lepchas are the aborigines of Sikkim, a Mongolian race, short and stout, like the Goorkhas. It is sometimes difficult to distinguish between the appearance of Lepchas and the Nepalese, but the former are arrant cowards, and will not enlist as soldiers, while the latter are of a fighting caste. The Lepchas are a quiet and inoffensive race; they subsist by cultivating clearings in the forest where they burn the jungle-trees and brushwood, moving on to a fresh spot the next year. Their agriculture is of a very rudimentary kind, and they have no word for plough in their language. In Darjeeling they act as coolies, and also as donestic servants, and will do any work, for neither they nor the Bhuteas have any caste. The Lepchas worship the forces of nature under the form of demons; the Bhuteas also, though professed Buddhists, propitiate evil demons, which seem to be much the same sort of imaginary beings as the Nats of the Burmese. The Lepchas are monogamous. It is said that the race is gradually dying out.

The Limboos are a race of half-breeds between the Lepchas and Nepalese, appearing to resemble the latter more than the former. There are several similar mongrel races of Nepalese which have become indigenous to the district, for the Nepaleso immigrate in great numbers, being driven out of their own country apparently by the press of over-population. Great numbers of them work as coolies on the tea estates, and few ever return to their own country. Their religion seems a cross between Buddism and Brahmanism, and they pride themselves on their distinctions of caste. Many of them carry the curved kukri in their kamarbands, while the Bhuteas and Lepchas use straight-bladed weapons. The Bhutea sword is something like that of the old Roman Legionaries, but the hilt is without a guard, after the fashion of Mongolian peoples. There are some curious aboriginal tribes inhabiting the jungles of the Terai, but they do not go up to the hills. They do not suffer from the malaria which attacks everyone else who enters their tract of country, but it is said that if they themselves leave it they are immediately attacked by the fever, for the malarial poison with which they have been thoroughly inoculated finds an exit in fever as soon as they quit its natural locality. The Bengalis and all the natives of the plains apply the general name "Pahariyas," or "hillmen," to all these races indiscriminately, who, much as they differ from each other, differ still more widely from the inhabitants of the plains in their habits of life and language. In fact, they are all Mongolians and mountaineers, and however much they may differ in other respects they resemble each other closely in muscular strength. The story goes that a Bhutea woman once carried a grand piano up the Ghaut from Punkabari to Darjeeling in three days, arriving quite fresh on the third day with the musical burden on her broad back.

BENGAL.

THE coroner of Calcutta, Dr. Chalmers, has concluded the inquest in the case of Dr. Khetter Mohun Mitter. The jury returned a verdict to the effect that deceased had died from a gun-shot wound, and were unanimously of opinion that the shot was fired at him by his eldest son, Nilmadhub Mitter.

THE post of Port Officer at Calcutta has not yet been filled up. Mr. Petley is acting, in addition to his duties as Deputy Conservator; and there is some idea of amalgamating the two appointments and confirming him in charge. Some such arrangement is believed to have been recommended by the Finance Commission.

A NATIVE police sub-inspector in a village in Lower Bengal having applied to the District Superintendent of Police for firearms and ammunition to defend himself and his men from the attacks of tigers and wolves by which the village was infested, the D. S. P. sent the following reply:—"If the tiger would be so obliging as to take you away, it would be a very good thing for the police in general. You are the worst and most troublesome officer I know." It is believed that he will not apply for arms again.

THE committee appointed to inquire into the Bengal Pilot Service with a view of remedying the grievances of junior pilots in respect to scarcity of employment and consequent small emoluments, have submitted a long report. They propose, amongst other things, that a number of senior pilots should be induced to retire on bonus or pension, and the remainder be divided into three classes; the junior class to consist of only the members, who will divide amongst themselves the whole of the work now allotted to the junior pilots.

At the meeting of the Bengal Council, on April 4th, Mr. H. Pratt, of Osler and Co., the new Trades Member, took his seat and was welcomed by the Lieutenant-Governor. The Municipal Bill was further considered, and several amendments put and lost. Mr. Kallynath Mitter's motion that the Commissioners should be allowed to appoint their own chairman was lost. Mr. Macaulay, in opposing the proposal, said he though the privilege of appointing a chairman should be conceded only where the Commissioners had to manage their own affairs. Calcutta had to manage, besides its own affairs, those of a large number of people extending over a large area outside Calcutta; and, in the interests of those people, he thought the proposed change undesirable. Calcutta should be regarded as the capital of a great empire; and as much provision as possible should be made for the proper conduct of Municipal affairs.

Mr. George Irving, who has gone home for eight months, has resigned his membership of the Bengal Legislative Council, the Port Commission, and the Council of the Defence Association. Mr. Irving has served for two terms on the Bengal Council, and as a member of both the Select Committees on the Municipal Bill has rendered valuable assistance to the party of progress in sanitary matters—the party of which he is one of the leaders as vice-president of the Health Society. No man in Calcutta in recent years has devoted more time and attention to public affairs, albeit unobtrusively and from a sense of duty; and he brought to the task sound judgment, wide experience, and much practical business knowledge. His successor in the Bengal Council will be Mr. H. Pratt, of Messrs. Osler and Co., one of the past Masters of the Trades' Association.

The canal system of Bengal is an important source of revenue, as much when utilised for navigation as when used to irrigate fields. The Orissa, the Midnapur, and the Sone Canals are used both for irrigation and for navigation, while the Hidgellee Tidal Canals, the Orissa Coast Canal, and the Calcutta and Eastern Canals serve for navigation only. The last named is the most remunerative system of navigation canals in India, and yields a net return of more than five per cent. on the capital cost. The revenue in the last official year, from navigation only, on all the six canal works just named amounted to nearly eight lakhs, and that did not include what what was received from Government transport services. The value of the merchandise carried on the canals was 778 lakhs of rupees, and the value of the crops irrigated was ninety-three lakhs. In addition to the canals, navigation is maintained on the Nuddea rivers by the Public Works Department and the revenue from that source last year was two lakhs.

MADRAS.

The final meeting of the Railway Committee took place at Hyderabad on April 6th, at the Nawab Vicar-ul-Umra's palace. The proposal will, says the Deccan Times, now be laid before the Minister.

Monseigneur Laournan, Archbishop of Pondicherry, has left India by the Messageries steamer for France. He has been suffering for some time past from a malady in the eyes, and he goes to Paris for the purpose of undergoing an operation. French India can ill afford to lose so good a man. A thorough educationalist of advanced opinions, devoted to missionary work, and intimately acquainted with the various creeds and peculiarities of the people throughout India, he is universally beloved.

Mr. Betts, the Agent of the South Indian Railway, having inquired of the Madras Government whether, at least in the near future, State aid may be expected in the extension of the railway from Tinnevelly into the Travancore State, he has been replied to in the negative. Mr. Betts is, therefore, at present in communication with the Travancore State and his board of directors upon the subject, in view, if possible, of something being secured in furtherance of this projected line of railway into the Native State of Travancore.

BOMBAY.

Major Selby has proposed, and Dr. Blaney has seconded, that Mr. Reginald Gilbert, of Messrs. Payne, Gilbert, and Sayani, solicitors, be elected a member of the Municipal Corporation in place of Dr. Peterson, resigned.

Mr. Nusserwanjee Manockjee Petit has sent in to Government his resignation as a Port Trustee of Bombay. He has also resigned his seat on the directors' board of two of the local Joint Stock Companies.

Mr. N. G. CHANDAVARKAR has been nominated as a canditate for the seat in the Corporation vacated by the resignation of Dr. Peterson, his proposer being Mr. Raghunath N. Khote, and his seconder Mr. Damodhar Thakersey Mooljee. Mr. Reginald Gilbert has also been nominated.

A CONFERENCE has been held at Hyderabad regarding the proposed railway extension to Raipur. The object of the meeting was to enable Sir Charles Elliot, the Minister of Public Works, to hear personally the arguments for or against the proposal. It was, the Deccan Times hears, unanimously decided that the scheme could only be taken up if the shareholders consented to the reduction of the guarantee from 5 to 4 per cent., as stated in the original proposal. It is doubted by many whether the reduction of the guarantee will be accepted by the shareholders, but the railway secretary seems sanguine on the point.

A MEETING of Native gentlemen has been held at the residence of the Hon. P. M. Mehta to elect a standing Congress Committee for Bombay. Mr. Hume was present, and explained the lines on which the future work of the Congress should be proceeded with. A large committee of over one hundred representative gentlemen was formed, with power to add to their number. A small working committee was also appointed, with Messrs. N.G. Chandavarkar and D. E. Wacha as secretaries.

The great fair at Tavra, in the Broach district, will be held this year from April 12th to May 11th, but owing to the pre-valence of cholera in some of the villages of Olpad and other talukas in the Surat Collectorate the Government, on the recommendation of Dr. Colah, in which the Sanitary Commissioner has concurred, has passed a resolution requesting the Commissioners of Divisions to direct the Collectors to take all commissioners of Divisions to direct the Collectors to take all possible measures to bring to the notice of the Hindoo public the great risk of cholera which all persons attending the fair will run, with a view to dissuade them from visiting the village. The Commissioner of Police, Bombay, is also requested to do his best to prevent people from going to the fair.

THE Bombay High Court have decided that mixing water with milk does not make it noxious to health, and is therefore with milk does not make it noxious to neath, and is therefore no offence under the penal laws. In February last a milk-woman, named Yellu, wife of Murgia, was convicted by Col. Doig, cantonment magistrate of Mallegaon, under rule 39, chapter 3, of rules framed under section 2 of Bombay Act 3 of 1867, of having adulterated milk by mixing water with it and made it noxious as drink, intending to sell it. She was and made it noxious as drink, intending to sen it. One was fined eight annas, or in default to suffer one day's simple imprisonment. Mr. W. Woodward, district magistrate of Nasik, in forwarding to the High Court the record and proceedings of the case, represented that the conviction was bad in law, as therefore no offence under the penal laws. Mr. Justice Birdwood and Mr. Justice Parsons, who considered the reference, reversed the conviction and sentence in the case for the reasons stated by the district magistrate.

A KURRACHEE paper says:—"The name of Sir Maxwell Melvill, whose early death all Bombay mourns and whose shining qualities none who ever came in contact with him could fail to praise and admire, is well known in Sind. Sir Maxwell Melvill, then Mr. Maxwell Melvill, was for some time Judicial Commissioner in Sind, and during the time that time Judicial Commissioner in Sind, and during the time that he was in Sind he had made himself extremely popular. A movement is now on foot in Sind to perpetuate his memory by collecting a fund in his name. A small sum has already been subscribed, and it is expected that in a short time the sum will reach a decent figure. We hope Sind will not lagbehind Bombay in her appreciation of worth, sympathy, and genuine interest, which the late Sir Maxwell Melvill evinced in her welfare and advancement."

her welfare and advancement."

The Madras Mail says:—"Mr. Henry Curwen, editor of the Times of India, has gone home on leave. Under his indefatigable, shrewd, and able direction the paper has sustained its high position in the Press of India, notwithstanding the great improvement, as a newspaper, that has been visible in its local rival since it passed into Mr. Geary's hands. The Bombay papers turn to excellent account the advantage of speaking on behalf of a very progressive Presidency and a very busy city, and no journals outside the United Kingdom are more capable, or more generally interesting. It may also be stated with confidence that there are no journals in the Colonies, and very few in the United Kingdom, that bear habitually a more attractive appearance. In all respects, Mr. habitually a more attractive appearance. In all respects, Mr. Curwen and Mr. Geary have proved themselves worthy successors of Mr. Knight and Mr. Maclean.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES, OUDH, AND PUNJAB.

SIR AUCKLAND COLVIN was to open a public library at Barabanki on the 10th instant, to be called after his name. A collection of some 2,000 books, chiefly Oriental, was to be presented by Munshi Newal Kishore, C.I.E., for acceptance on

THE Lieut.-Governor of the North-West Provinces has not only passed final orders that the Nawab Mohib Ali Khan should get from his nephew, his Highness the Nawab of Rampore, his pension of Rs. 2,611 a month, but directed that the arrears from the time it was stopped in October, 1883, should be paid.

With reference to the alleged misconducted funeral of Mrs. Troward, at Montgomery, Mr. Troward writes to a local paper to say that as soon as the case appeared in print he submitted to his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor a detailed statement of the circumstances, including the fact that he had consulted Dr. Perry, who had attended his wife, and who gave his opinion that the cause of death must have been weakness of the heart brought on by rheumatic fever. Mr. Troward requested Mr. J. B. Lyall to make any investigation he might deem advisable, but the latter replied that he could see no reason for thinking such action necessary.

THE Kadir Cup at Meerut has been won by Mr. B. T. Mahon, 8th Hussars, riding his horse Cornet. The same gentleman's Ameer, ridden by owner, won the Hog Hunters Cup which follows the pigsticking. Mr. Mahon is the hono-The same rary secretary of the meeting.

A MEETING of the North-West Branch of Lady Dufferin's Fund was held at Lucknow on the 4th inst, the Lieut-Governor of these Provinces presiding, and Lady Dufferin being present. A summarised report of the proceedings, which were marked by considerable enthusiasm, will be published shortly.

Mr. J. Colvin, the Private Secretary to the Lieut.-Governor of the North-West Provinces, has rejoined his appointment, relieving Mr. Shakespear. Mr. Colvin passed his examination in Persian, for which purpose he had taken two months' language leave, much sooner than he expected, hence his sudden return to duty.

It is announced that the marriage of the Maharaj Kumar of Benares will be celebrated with great pomp in the month of Baisak. The bridegroom, with a large retinue, will go from Benares to Hutwa, where they will be the guests of his Highness the Maharajah for a few days. The bridegroom party and bridal procession will go from Hutwa to the bride's parents' house. Grand preparations are being made by the Hutwa Maharajah to entertain the Benares party at Hutwa.

MR. J. B. LYALL has appointed Sardar Muhammad Hayat Khan, C.S.I., Assistant Commissioner of the Punjab to be Divisional Judge of Ferozpore—an appointment subordinate only to the Judge of the Chief Court—with original civil jurisdiction; without limit as regards value, and in criminal cases with power of passing sentences of death, subject to confirmation. The appointment is more or less experimental, but the new judge has given proofs of high judicial abilities. It may be remembered that it was this official who, after the Afghan war, was tried by a Commission at Peshawar on grave charges brought by Sir Lepel Griffin, and was honourably acquitted.

NATIVE PRESS.

THE SIKKIM EXPEDITION.

There is no knowing what turn affairs in Sikkim will take. It appears that Lord Dufferin is not going to leave India without causing such another complication in Sikkim as he did in Burma. If the Raja of Sikkim does not submit to the Viceroy's terms a war is inevitable.—The Sangbad Provakar.

There is a quarrel really going to take place with Tibet. Lord Dufferin is now on a visit to Darjeeling. We hear that the Raja of Sikkim has been asked to see him at that place. This is not good news. Who can say that the English have not taken steps which may induce the Tibetans to fight? We know that the Tibetans will ultimately be defeated, and Tibet may be annexed. We also know that the object of the British merchants will be attained. Our only fear is our own blood and money. It is certain that the Tibetans will not easily be defeated. Besides, if China joins Tibet, the affair will take a very serious turn. The Anglo-Indians are rejoicing, but we are alarmed. Wars curdle our blood and drain away our wealth. alarmed. Wars curdle our blood and drain away our wealth. Will Lord Dufferin take the burden of blame upon himself at the time of his departure !- The Sahachar.

It is clear that the war is not with the Raja of Sikkim, but with the Tibetans. We shall not be sorry to see the Raja of Sikkim become a companion of Theebaw. But China is behind Tibet. Let our readers imagine how serious the affair will be. Lord Dufferin is going away after exciting this fire. It was very worthy of him to resign at this moment. He will be able to achieve glory if the war is easily settled, and if anything serious happens that will concern his successor.—The Suravi and Pataka.

OFFENDED DIGNITY.

Why has the Government undertaken this war so suddenly? The finances are embarrassed, and there are reasons for anxiety in Burma and on the North-Western frontiers. Why are you going to add to your difficulties? What offence did the Tibetans or the Raja of Sikkim give to the Government? Of what benefit will the conquest of Sikkim or the blowing up of Fort.

Lingtu be? The English say that their troops will not proceed to the Tibet frontier. If they do not go there how can a lesson be given to the Tibetans? Will the English troops watch the Tibet-Sikkim frontier, or will they retire after blowing up Fort Lingtu? If they return, the Tibetans will come again and build a fort. Then will the English again send troops? Out of offended dignity the English are going to undertake this war.

The Bangabasi.

Probably a war with Sikkim and Tibet is inevitable. According to the usual custom the Anglo-Indians first stated that there would be no war with Sikkim, and that the Tibetans would withdraw from Lingtu as soon as they heard of the arrival of British troops. The Raja was also to become subservient. But that has not happened. The Tibet Government has increased the number of troops at Fort Lingtu. Under the orders of the Viceroy, troops are proceeding to Sikkim. Our readers will be able to judge what turn affairs are likely to take. Every preparation has been made for a war. The proclamation remains to be issued. But can it be said that the English Government has no desire for war and that its preparations have been made only to frighten the Raja of The Bangabasi its preparations have been made only to frighten the Raja of Sikkim and the people of Tibet? It is ludicrous to suppose that an insignificant country like Tibet will have the courage to fight the powerful British lion. Is it improper for us to suppose that China is behind Tibet?—The Samaya.

THE DUFFERIN DEMONSTRATION. THE DUFFERIN DEMONSTRATION.

We have already said that there ought not to be any demonstration in honour of Lord Dufferin ten months previous to his retirement. The Anglo-Indians are desirous that the Natives should join the demonstration. Are the Natives so foolish? What Lord Dufferin did in the last three years may be changed within the remaining ten months. At the time of departure Lord Dufferin may not pass through Calcutta. We will not make any demonstration in his honour. During his stay in Simla, will not Lord Dufferin be able to accept the homage we can pay to him from Calcutta? In the meanting stay in Simia, will not Lord Dufferin be able to accept the homage we can pay to him from Calcutta? In the meantime the Anglo-Indian papers, in praising Lord Dufferin, have abused Lord Ripon. Some Native papers have also begun to throw blame on Lord Dufferin. Why do you cause this friction? Lord Dufferin can by no means approve the demonstration which the Anglo-Indians are going to make. In fact, the object of the Anglo-Indians is not to show respect to him. We made demonstrations in honour of Lord Ripon, and this is their reply. They want to do us harm by convincing Lord Dufferin that they are respectful to him, and that the Natives are otherwise.—The Sahachar.

THE FINANCIAL CRISIS. Whatever we say, we say justly. But that is not palatable to those whose object is to do injustice. Now the salt tax has been raised. How can we say that the Government has done this justly? The scale of official salaries is very high. been raised. this justly? where are officials so highly-paid as in this country? By paying such salaries the Government is embarrassing povertystricken India. Besides this, Committees and Commissions are often appointed, and Durbars are held. For these a good deal of money is spent. Then there are wars. There is no necessity for war. But if it be said that wars are necessary for the defence of India, for whose sake is India to be defended? The English are governing India for their own interest, and if they lose it they will be beggars. Therefore the taxes imposed on account of the wars un dertaken for the defence of India ought to be borne by the English people. Burma has been annexed. Who will benefit by this annexation? It is true that Burma has been conquered with the blood of the Indian people. But thousands of Englishmen have become rich by commercial dealings in that country. Therefore the English ought to bear the burden of expenses. The people of India are very innocent and loyal. The English would have got a lesson had they done such things in any other country.—The Prajabandhu.

THE NATIONAL REVIEW.*

THE NATIONAL REVIEW.*

The reform of the House of Lords, a matter to which we have had occasion to refer in noticing the two last issues of the National Review, is the subject of the first article in the present number. It is no new question. To say nothing of the many diatribes of the Radicals, to whose levelling tendencies the House is an eyesore, against its very existence, it may be called to mind that, nearly twenty years ago, so good a Whig as Earl Russell proposed materially to modify its character. The present Premier, who had succeeded to his seat in 1868, then observed, "We belong too much to one class, and the consequence is, that, with respect to a large number of questions, we are too much of one mind." (April, 1869.) This is Lord Salisbury's opinion to-day. The object aimed at is, in Lord Dunraven's words, to preserve "the essential characteristics of the House, but it must be adapted to the requirements of the time." Mr. Curzon, whose scheme we summarized (Allen's Indian Mail, April 9th, 1888), has submitted it to the judgment of the eldest sons of Peers, twenty-six in number, who have seats in the House of Commons. Of these, twenty-four, including Lord Hartington, agree in the necessity of a Reform, though three of these do not propose to proceed on the lines of Mr. Curzon's scheme; one regards all reform as unlikely to satisfy those who "clamour for the abolition of the House of Lords," and therefore as foredoomed to failure; while another (Mr. Coleridge) is "in favour of Single Chamber Democracy." those who "clamour for the abolition of the House of Lords," and therefore as foredoomed to failure; while another (Most readers will agree with the present Prime Minister, that a moderate admixture of Life-peers, coupled with the power of expulsion of unworthy members (a power which, oddly enough, the Upper House does not at present possess), will be adequate bases for a change which must necessarily, in its insention he of a tentotive character. ception, be of a tentative character.

Fiscal reform will for a long time to come be a hotly disputed question. Lord Pembroke thought that he had successfully disposed, in the April number of the National, of Mr. Cripps' article on "Free Trade and the Economists," which puted question. Lord Pembroke thought that he had successfully disposed, in the April number of the National, of Mr. Cripps' article on "Free Trade and the Economists," which formed an important contribution to the previous (March) issue. We think that he has found a foeman worthy of his steel. Mr. Cripps, in his "Reply," is able to point to admissions and discrepancies on the part of his antagonist which seem fatal to Lord Pembroke's argument; and the considerations on which Mr. Cripps dwells (pp. 380-1) with much force, seem conclusively to prove that, owing to the foreign competition fostered by our "Free-trade" legislation, "there are not sufficient opportunities of profitable home investments." International competition is, too, as pointed out in Mr. Mallock's well-considered Essay on "Conservatism and the Diffusion of Property," a very important factor in the momentous question, how, with a growing population, the British labourer is to possess that "income with security," that "security that, the labour being forthcoming, the labourer shall have the means of procuring an accustomed livelihood," the absence of which underlies half the discontent, and, consequently, most of the Socialism, with which we have now to contend. This same Socialism is prominently referred to in a Paper, which will be generally read, by Mr. Edward Salmon, on "The Working Classes and Religion." Mr. Salmon, however, deals chiefly with the general question, how to bring Religion within the ken of the working classes, of whom he thinks (p. 333) about four-fifths wholly indifferent, and more impervious to truth than even the Secularists. "They do not think even enough to disbelieve," are the vigorous words which he quotes from a local clergyman. Mr. Salmon rightly deplores the lamentable absence in the Church of good, earnest, preaching; that "foolishness of preaching" as St. Paul tells us. And he contrasts our Church, most unifavourably, with Dissenters in this respect. "Of one thing," he says, and with justice, "I am convinced; the

of the case.

To the most rabid Home-Ruler, Mr. Bagenal's interesting notes on "Local Government in Ireland" would prove instructive: to the ordinary reader it is simply a mine of information as to the "incapacity, bitterness, and blackguardism of the local bodies in Ireland, which have fallen into the hands of the Parnellite party." Every Unionist member of Parliament should read this article. True it is, that the power of the National League is rapidly on the wane; and that its practical annihilation will be indefinitely settled by the Pope's condemnation (though it may gall a Briton's self-love to be beholden to a foreign prelate for aid in the Government of any condemnation (though it may gall a Briton's self-love to be beholden to a foreign prelate for aid in the Government of any part of the United Kingdom). None the less may we, in the light of the facts here revealed, contemplate the real character of Home Rule, and the depth of the abyss into which Mr. Gladstone is so anxious to plunge us.

The sympathies of every reader will follow Mr. Alfred Austin in his eloquent threnody on the lamented death of so distinguished a representation.

distinguished a man as the late Matthew Arnold, one who was ever young, whose "life was perhaps shortened in some degree by a boyish freak," and who, though he lived to the age of sixty-six, had that "true vitality," which kept him "alive to the last." Literature will not soon replace him.

Some similar innate power of rejuvenescence seems to have fallen to the share of Berthold Auerbach, respecting whom Miss Helen Zimmern speaks sympathetically. Born in the Black Forest a Jew, a Jew he remained, and was buried in his native village; of which, and of its denizens, his best known work, "Village Tales," was a wonderfully vivid delineation. In the remaining Papers, Mr. Linford finishes his narrative of English "Postal Communication;" and Mr. Gallenga foretells the success of the forthcoming Italian Exhibition.

THE STATESMEN SERIES: LORD BEACONSFIELD.

"The intention of the 'Statesmen Series' is, as its title implies, to comprise a collection of brief biographical studies of the great men who have influenced the political history of the world." Such is the explanation of the aim and object of this admirable and interesting venture. And what more fitting than that the place of honour should be given to the Earl of Beaconsfield, a man in the judgment of many the greatest which this century has produced—great not alone in the exalted position to which his abilities had raised him great not only as regards the high patriotism which ever animated his words and actions, but great as regards the ciranimated his words and actions, but great as regards the cir-cumstance that he began life with no undue accidents of birth, lineage and wealth. With him the struggle with adversity was constant and unremitting—poverty was ever ready to pounce down upon a toiling, unaided worker in the vineyard of enterprise; but all difficulties were overcome, and when on the memorable 19th of April his spirit fled to the Creator which made it a nation mourned a nation's loss. The story which is alike instructive and fu'll of attractions, is told by Mr which is alike instructive and fu'l of attractions, is told by Mr. Kebbel with unpretentious simplicity. He alike depicts Disraeli in the Senate, amidst the triumphs of unrivalled oratory, and drawing aside the veil which hid the sanctity of private life from prying eyes, shows the Earl of Beaconsfield as a loving, happy husband, proud of his wife, proud of his home, revelling amidst the charms of nature, a popular landlord, good-natured, kind-hearted, beloved of the many, worshipped by the few who could claim closer personal intimacy.

If the present volume may be accepted as an earnest of future successes the "Statesmen Series" bids fair to reflect credit upon the enterprising house of Messrs. W. H. Allen and Co., which risks a venture that should be alike popular and profitable.

"Religion, or God in All Things": an Epic. By W. J. Spratly. Book I: Prologue. (Digby and Long.) Mr. Spratly, in publishing a mere Prologue to the larger poem which is to follow, modestly says in his Preface that his object is to invite a searching criticism, in the hope that exposure of the larger property of the larger property. faults will materially assist him in his future labours. He wants, therefore, an exposure of deficiencies. We are content to find in this little work much excellent performance and much promise. The theme selected—that of a fervent, imaginative mind, reverently seeking for truth, but disturbed and agonised by the mystery of evil—of sin and sorrow—is an old one, and has been handled by some of the greatest poets of all nations. But it will always be a fascinating theme and Donto one, and has been handled by some of the greatest poets of all nations. But it will always be a fascinating theme, and Dante and Milton have not yet exhausted the field for younger singers. In Mr. Spratly's attempt to deal with so vast a subject there is much that will please even the most captious critic, even when he agrees with the author in his confession that he has "given, perhaps, unwise attention to rhythm to the possible neglect of the more vital characteristics of good verse." The work shows deep thought, intelligence, and a keen reasoning faculty, and considerable mastery over the most difficult form of verse; but in his anxiety to secure correct rhythm, the author is apt to sacrifice sometimes "the poetic idea." But the work is one which contains many passages of great beauty and felicity of expression, and gives, as we have said, much promise for the future.

BOOKS FOR REVIEW.—"Statesmen Series: Lord Palmerston," by Lloyd C. Saunders; "A Lombard Street Mystery," by Muirhead Robertson (W. Bartholomew); "A Great Turf Fraud," by Dalrymple J. Belgrave (James Hogg); "The War of the Succession in Spain," by Colonel Hon. Arthur Parnell (G. Bell and Son); "The Divine Programme of the World's History," by Mr. and Mrs. H. Grattan Guinness (Hodder and Stoughton) Stoughton).

WE congratulate the Maharaja of Baroda on the very wise step which he is about to take of sending selected young men to England to study scientific and technical subjects, under the supervision and care of Mr. T. K. Gajjar, Professor of Biology in the Baroda College. Of all the Native Princes of India his highness Maharaja Sayaji Rao Gaikwar stands fore-most in point of enlightened rule. His State may not boast of most in point of enlightened rule. His State may not boast of a representative assembly, but in other directions, where the interests and advantage of the people entrusted by benign Providence to his care are concerned, he was proved that he is a real ruler—the father of his people. He has gauged public feeling correctly, and has found out what is the most pressing want of India. He has been gradually introducing industries into his territory and strengthening them by the importation of machinery. There is every reason to believe that if proper instruction were provided the Guzerathi would show as much aptitude for arts and industries as he has done for purely commercial enterprise. We therefore commend the resolution of mercial enterprise. We therefore commend the resolution of his Highness. Other Princes can well follow the example with advantage to themselves, their people, and India generally.—The Marhatta.

THE DUC D'ORLEANS' SHOOTING ADVENTURES.—It is said that when the Duc d'Orleans' shooting party succeeds in bag-ging big game a French horn is sounded. The distinguished isitors must have blown their own trumpet pretty frequently during the past few days, as news which has reached Calcutta reports that several tigers have fallen to their rifles. On the 26th ult., when two more tigers were bagged, one of which was perfectly riddled with bullets before he succumbed, the Duc had an adventure which he will be able to speak of with Duc had an adventure which he will be able to speak of with pride when he returns to Europe. A correspondent says:— On this day a tiger sprang suddenly out of some jungle into the open amongst the party, and leaped right into the howdah occupied by the Duc d'Orleans, who managed to get clear by sliding down behind by the elephant's tail. The tiger looked round, and then jumped on the ground, and made off without a shot being fired at him. On March 30 a tiger, 9 feet 9 inches, was shot by Colonel De Perseval, which, on dissection, was found to have the splinters of a shell lodged in his kidneys, liver and lungs supposed to be from a shot fired by Dr. Forliver, and lungs, supposed to be from a shot fired by Dr. For-syth ten days before. On the 31st another tiger was shot, bringing the bag up to eighteen. There is some fever amongst the camp followers, and the representative of the Nepaul Government with the party is also under the doctor's hands.

THE VICEROY'S LAST TIGER.—The tiger shot by the Viceroy near Govindghur on the 2nd April was killed under somewhat extraordinary circumstances. There were three tigers in the beat, and a deep ravine with rocky sides. The guns were posted at the mouth of the ravine and the tigers beaten from its highest point; but instead of coming out as they were expected to do, they took shelter in a cave between some large rocks, and lay with their heads towards the beaters. Lord William Beresford and Dr. Findlay went to the spot, and after much trouble succeeded in turning the tigers out. One of these, a very large male, went across the ravine, and broke through the beaters; the other, a stout young tiger, passed on as required, and was killed from the rock on which Lord Dufferin was posted; the third, a tigress, remained in the cave, and all efforts to dislodge her proving in vain, the Viceroy joined the party at the cave. A very small cleft between the reals disloged the igners, who were large reals. vicercy joined the party at the cave. A very small cleft between the rocks disclosed the tigress, who was lying growling near this opening. The cavern was very dark, and it was difficult to see anything but the eyes of the tigress through the narrow aperture. It was determined to try severe measures to move her; and the Vicercy, kneeling down and placing his rifle into the opening between the rocks, fired. A charge from the wounded tigress was awaited, but no charge ensued. Lord Dufferin had shot her exactly between the eyes, and she was Dufferin had shot her exactly between the eyes, and she was dead. It is not often that a tiger is killed in this way, literally at the muzzle of the rifle. The Viceroy's tigress was a very handsome animal, and measured nine feet two inches.

THE HYDERABAD (DECCAN) COMPANY.

It is satisfactory to learn that the Government has consented to a Parliamentary inquiry by Commission into the whole story of the formation and floating of the Hyderabad (Deccan) Company, Limited. It is, however, not so satisfactory to have to believe that urgent necessity exists for such an inquiry. It is most unfortunate that at a time when we were congratulating ourselves upon the confidence which was being placed by all the Native Princes of India in the justice and honesty of purpose of British rule in that country, that a scandal should arise more serious in its aspects, and more damaging in its possible results, than any scandal connected with business transactions between Englishmen and Natives since the "Plunderful" times of the old East India Company. We can recall to mind no scandal of this nature so grave since then. Jervis Court-martial was a scandal pitiable and abominable enough, but it only concerned two individuals, although one of them was no less a personage than the Commanderin-Chief of India. There was no question in that case of fair or unfair dealings between Englishmen and Natives. In the Hyderabad (Deccan) business, however, questions involving the good name of Englishmen for honesty and rectitude are involved. Nay, more than this, the character of the relations of the Government of India and the India Office with the Feudatory States of India is also called into question. This fact alone cannot but tend to weaken that moral influence of England in India, by which influence she more than by any strength of arms holds empire there. It is to be regretted that inquiry is necessary, but it is to be hoped that that inquiry shall be open, searching, and most exacting, and also that it shall take place without delay. It is not a matter for public concern that merely the Sirdar Diler Jung at Hyderabad should clear himself of charges made against his honour and probity, or that certain promoters, jobbers and lawyers in England should have an opportunity of explaining or disposing of "extravagant charges and illusions." The character of the Sirdar concerns Hyderabad alone, the character of company promoters, &c., concerns themselves chiefly and their clients, but the character of British officials concerns the country

The many-sided gentlemen who deal in limited at large. liabilities in the city of London may have their own code of financial ethics; they have come into the world to make money-honestly, no doubt, if they can-but to make money, and they may gain credit for astuteness from those who envy or imitate them, for actions which are not altogether founded upon a strict following of the eighth commandment. But where the question concerns the dealings of British officials there can be no shelter from consequences under a convenient laxity of even political ethics. The truth, and the whole truth, must be brought to light. If what is being rumoured be only half true far higher reputations than those which are being bandied about in newspapers are at stake. Painful as it may be to have the fierce glare of publicity thrown upon high places it is better than they should stand as now in a twilight which distorts. Truth and honesty will court the light, and justice now calls for it.

India in Parliament.

IMMORALITY IN BOMBAY.

Mr. S. SMITH asked the Under-Secretary of State for India whether his attention had been directed to a statement made by the Rev. Alfred S. Dyer, dated Bombay, March 30, 1888, wherein he stated that:—"A medical officer, in a private communication, says that respectable girls are forced into lives of prostitution. The poorer class of Natives are in great awe of persons in authority. Officials go out into the villages, and say it is the order of the Government that so many girls should go and be registered as prostitutes. The poor people are afraid to refuse or resist, their daughters are delivered up, and thus virtuous girls are consigned to lives of infamy," and whether the Government would inquire whether any such practices existed. Mr. S. Smith asked the Under-Secretary of State for India existed.

Sir J. Gorst: Any persons guilty of the offences described in the question would, under the Indian Penal Code, be liable to ten years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine. If evidence of the commission of such offence were laid before the Public Prosecutor at Bombay it would be his duty to institute proceedings; but an anonymous statement that Government officials are in the habit of committing such an offence does officials are in the habit of committing such an offence does not afford any basis upon which an inquiry could be directed.

MARRIAGES IN MAURITIUS.

In answer to Sir G. CAMPBELL,

In answer to Sir G. Campbell,
Baron H. de Worms said: It appears from the annual report of the Registrar-General of Mauritius for 1886 that in that year the percentage of illegitimate births was 53.7 for the whole population and 62.3 for the Indian population. The law of Mauritius does not recognise any marriages contracted in the colony which are not celebrated before an officer of the Civil Status. As regards the small marriage rate, the explanation which suggests itself as most probable is that a considerable number of the Indians who marry according to their personal religious law do not think it necessary to contract civil marriages. The provision for the elementary education of the Indian population is inadequate. The colonial Government and Legislature have been repeatedly urged by successive Secretaries of State to supply this want; but financial and other difficulties have hitherto prevented effectual measures being adopted, and I can only add that the Secretary of State will be glad if the hope expressed by the Governor may be realised. The Secretary of State cannot insist upon the passing of a measure of this kind, which involves expenditure.

APRIL 25.

CONTAGIOUS DISEASES ACTS IN INDIA.

Mr. J. STUART asked the Under-Secretary of State for India whether he had received by mail last week, as anticipated, the reply of the Government of India to the communications of the India Office on the subject of the repeal of the Contagious Diseases Acts in that country.

Sir J. Gorst: Yes, Sir. Mr. J. STUART: Will the hon. gentleman lay the correspondence on the table of the House

Sir. J. Gorst asked for notice of the question.

Mr. J. Stuart asked the Under-Secretary of State for India whether there was at the India Office a copy of a circular memorandum, No. 21, "Office of Quartermaster-General in India," addressed to general officers commanding divisions and districts, dated from the Army headquarters, Simla, June 17, 1886, and signed by E. F. Chapman, Major-General, Quartermaster-General in India, on the subject of cantonment lock hospitals; and whether he would lay that circular memorandum upon the table of the House hospitals; and whether he would lay that circular memorandum upon the table of the House.

Sir J. Gorst: No, Sir—(laughter).

Sir J. STUART: Will the hon. gentleman take steps to obtain the return?—(hear, hear).

Sir J. Gorst: I cannot possibly undertake to obtain a return of the existence of which I have no knowledge.

Mr. J. STUART: If I state that I have seen the return will the hom contlement under those circumstances take steps to the hon gentleman under those circumstances take steps to obtain it?—(hear, hear).

Sir J. Gorst: I made a very full statement to the House some time ago in which I said that the Secretary of State would not apply to the Government of India for any reports and papers on this subject until the full report promised by the Government of India had been received, considered, and a decision founded thereon—(hear, hear).

Mr. J. STUART: Is the hon. gentleman going to exclude all information outside that report?—(hear, hear).

No answer. Mr. J. STUART: I have a right to an answer—(cheers). The hon gentleman has refused to give the return because he has no official knowledge of its existence; and then he says he will ask for no papers until the report of the Government of India has been received and a decision arrived at.

The SPEAKER: It is within the competence of a Minister to refuse to answer a question.

Mr. J. Stuart: Do Lunderstand that the hon. gentleman refuses to answer? Sir J. Gorst: I have not refused to answer any question. If the hon, gentleman wishes for any further answers to those which I have given I shall be much obliged if he will give the usual notice—(hear, hear).

Mr. Channing: The reply of the hon, gentleman in the first instance was yes. I think the House is entitled to know what is meant by that yes.

No answer.

THE BURMA RUBY MINES.

In reply to Mr. HANBURY, In reply to Mr. Hanbury, Sir J. Gorst said the ruby mines could not be visited by Europeans without the permission of the Chief Commissioner.
Permission was granted to agents of all respectable firms, and if Messrs. Gillanders, Arbuthnot, and Co. had applied for leave it would no doubt have been granted. This firm was in negotiation with the Government for a concession of these mines without competition at two lakhs of rupees per annum.
Messrs. Streeter and Co. offered four lakhs. The competition was between them and Messrs. Gillanders, Arbuthnot, and Co.
Until the report of the expert sent to the mines had been made, no decision, as he had frequently stated, would be arrived at.

Mr. S. HILL asked (1) whether the offer of Captain Pratten, on behalf of Messrs. Streeter, to take a lease of the ruby mines on benaif of Messrs. Streeter, to take a lease of the ruby mines in Burma under certain conditions as to the working and arrangements with the Natives was formally accepted by the Indian Government; (2) was this acceptance given with the full knowledge of Lord Kimberley; (3) did Messrs. Streeter fully undertake all the conditions required; (4) and upon what ground has the present Secretary of State for India repulsited these arrangements?

Sir J. Gorst said the replies to the questions are as follow: (1) There was no such acceptance as to make a binding con tract; (2) Lord Kimberley was aware of what took place; (3) I understand they were ready to do so; (4) the Secretary of State has not repudiated any arrangement which has be come binding on the Government of India.

MINING RIGHTS IN HYDERABAD.

In reply to Mr. J. MACLEAN, Sir J. Gorst said: The contract of January 7th, 1886 between the Government of the Nizam and Messrs. Watson and Stewart for the grant of mining rights in Hyberabad was described by me, in reply to a question in the House of Commons, on June 27th, 1887. The contract itself, the negotiations which led to it, and the circumstances under which it was sanctioned by the Government of India and the Secretary of State, can be found in papers laid before Parliament in September, 1887. For the subsequent transactions of Messrs. Watson and Stewart, of the company formed, and of the Nizam's Government in relation thereto, the Secretary of State has no responsibility. A committee of the Council of India had in 1883 the question of a grant of mining rights in connection with the proposed extension of the Nizam's State Railway under consideration. Their conclusions are to be found in the papers above-mentioned, page 3, and were adversed as the such greats. The pattern was not company under the conto such grants. The matter was not again under the consideration of the Council or any committee thereof till after the contract of January 7th, 1886, had been executed, with the approval of the Government of India. On May 16th, 1887, the Secretary of State received a telegram from the Government in these words:—"Hyderabad mining operations promise well. Nizam's Government wishes to take shares in the company. The President thinks this desirable, and recommends our raising no objection; while accepting no responsibility, we have agreed." No action was taken on this telegram, and the Secretary of State was neither aware of the actual purchase of shares nor gave any assistance to Abdul Hak in relation thereto by appointment of a special committee or otherwise. If the hon, member will move for the Yellow-book it will be laid on the table.

Mr. J. Maclean asked whether it was considered that the Government of India had no responsibility for this transaction when it was consulted about the purchase of shares, and whether it had no responsibility for preventing an Indian Prince coming to London and being shamefully robbed.

Sir J. Gorst said the question was an argumentative one, and had better be put upon the paper.

Lord R. Churchill asked how it could be contended that the Secretary of State was not responsible for the action of the Government of India.

Mr. Labouchere asked whether a telegram sent by Colonel Marshall, the English private secretary to the Nizam, appointed by the Governor-General, sent to Abdul Hak did not affect the responsibility of the India Government.

Sir J. Gorst said he should like notice of the question.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

MAJOR E. R. ELLES, R.A., Assistant, Quartermaster-General and Secretary of the Mobilisation Committee, will be granted an extension of tenure of appointment to enable him to complete his duties on the Mobilisation Committee.

THE following special service officers being no longer required in Burma, they have been directed to return to India and join their respective battalions:—Lieutenant Norris, 2nd Lancashire Fusiliers; Lieutenant Davis, 2nd Oxford Light Infantry; and Lieutenant Pickard-Cambridge, 2nd Bedford.

THE Commanding Royal Engineer in Burma has been directed to relieve Lieutenants T. B. Renny-Tailyour, R.E., and T. R. Lawrence, R. E., in their appointments as Assistant Field Engineers, and to send them to rejoin their permanent appointments.

THE military posts at Segu and Pongbyin have been handed over to the Military Police.

THE Military Surveyors having completed their work with the Intelligence Branch in Burma have been directed to return to India by the first opportunity.

THE following military privileges are to be continued to the troops in Burma (privileges not mentioned will cease):—

Working pay for military signallers, at single rates, may be retained at stations specially authorised by general officer commanding.

Allowances to Field Treasure-chest Officers to be retained when absolutely necessary. Those for officers commanding stations and posts for stationery to be retained.

Fifty per cent. on pay of Army Hospital, Native corps. Extra pay to sanctioned private followers, Native Troops. Subsistence allowance to European soldiers' wives in private Free rations and 50 per cent. pay to public followers. Free rations to sanctioned followers paid by troops.

Rations to families of British troops

A reserve will be maintained of field service equipment for issue on payment.

When taking the field, or when certified by competent authority, that supplies are not procurable, issue on payment will be made of rations to postal clerks, postmen, clerks, signallers, and agents

Supply of rum to Native troops on special duty will be ruled by paragraphs 821 to 827 Army Regulations, India, Vol. V.

Rations on payment of full cost to officers and servants. Free rail to officers, warrant officers, and clerks returning to India invalided.

Pay of cooks, bhisties, sweepers, moochies, and salutris with Mounted Infantry.
Pay and charges for regimental and station conservancy.

Feeding of officers' horses, and conveyance of their baggage on payment of full cost.

Return pay and passages to establishments to be retained under conditions of paragraphs 143 and 170, Army Regulations, India, Vol. V.

Return pay and passages of temporary establishments proceeding on sick leave, or invalided to India, to be retained as in preceding paragraph.

THE troops forming the Sikkim Field Force are to be furnished with supplies sufficient to last until the end of next The military authorities in India will forward these forthwith, as it is impossible to say how long it may be found necessary to detain the force across the frontier. The positions from which the Tibetans have been ousted must be held until some arrangements have been made with the lamas, and considering the distance of Lhassa from Lingtu, these cannot be expected to be made very quickly

Owing to ill-health, Major Stewart Mackenzie, Military Secretary to the Governor of Madras, is obliged to return to England almost immediately. He contracted, while out shooting at Vizagapatam last November, jungle fever. Captain Wyndham, 16th (Queen's) Lancers, nephew by marriage to the Governor, probably acts for Major Mackenzie, being succeeded as Aide de Capp by Lieutenent Mulling Royal Artillery as Aide-de-Camp by Lieutenant Mullins, Royal Artillery.

THE following details are published regarding the Bengal Presidency Volunteer Reserve Battalion scheme:—The enrolment is open to all classes of Europeans and East Indians residing within a certain distance of Calcutta, to be defined by the Local Government, subject to the condition that no member of the Presidency Volunteer Battalion shall be allowed member of the Presidency Volunteer Battanon shall be allowed to enter the reserve within one year of his resignation as an active Volunteer. The Reserve is to be officered, in the first instance, by gentlemen who have held commissions in the army or Volunteer forces; and who, on joining the Reserve and passing an examination under section 5 of the Army Regulations for Indian Volunteers, may be promoted to a higher grade. Promotion from the ranks of the Reserve to the comprisioned grade will pressented equifying higher grade. Promotion from the ranks of the Reserve to the commissioned grade will necessitate qualifying by doing duty with an active corps. Officers for the Reserve will, in the first instance, be nominated by the officer commanding, and afterwards elected. The uniform is to be khakee, the same as that now wern by European troops on active service, with bandoliers, knickerbockers, and putties. Seven drills must be attended annually, and five patties. Seven drills must be attended annually, and five shots fired at 100, 200, and 300 yards, hitting the target, four feet square, twice at least at each range. For men who comply with these conditions a capitation grant of Rs. 10 yearly will be sanctioned, and a grant of Rs. 5 is also sanctioned towards paying the cost of uniform. The shooting qualification, which is very easy, was suggested by the Commander-in-Chief. Members of the Reserve Battalion will undertake to maintain great and he always in readings for services and to good order and be always in readiness for service, and to attend in uniform fully accoutred whenever summoned by a competent authority, save when prevented by duty to employer, by sickness, or by other unavoidable cause. The competent authority, save when prevented by duty to employer, by sickness, or by other unavoidable cause. The battalion will be divided into district companies and sections.

THE Pinneer gives some details regarding the death of Lieut. D. W. Farquhar, R.A., at Neemuch. During a game of polo he "crossed" the pony of Lieut. Kenny at right angles, and was thrown head-foremost to the ground, which is described as being alwest as hard as rock. He was nicked is described as being almost as hard as rock. He was picked up in an insensible state, and died at sunrise on the following morning, a fracture of the skull having made his case hopeless morning, a fracture of the skull having made his case hopeless from the first. Lieut. Kenny was in no way to blame for the collision, which he could not possibly have avoided. Lieut. Farquhar's battery was under orders for Kirkee, and he had intended going out tiger-shooting on the very day he was killed, but could not do so pending further telegraphic orders regarding the departure of the battery. Neemuch is certainly an unlucky station for polo-players, as this is the fourth accident which has occurred in the last eighteen months. Lieut. Johnson, R.A., having broken his arm; Lieut. Milward, Lancashire Fusiliers, having sustained concussion of the brain: cashire Fusiliers, having sustained concussion of the brain; and Captain Salmon and Lieut. Farquhar having been killed outright.

THE Darjeeling paper says:—"There is a good deal of red spider blight about the tea gardens in the hills just now. Some way or other, of late years it has been like the poor, always with us, and, so far, nobody appears to have succeeded in finding a remedy for this pest.

THE Industrial Exhibition at Kolhapore was brought to a close, April 12th, with the ceremony of presenting prizes to the successful exhibitors. Colonel Hunter, C.B., C.S.I., presided. An interesting report, drawn up by the honorary secretaries, Messrs. Candy and Shannon, was read by the latter gentleman. The exhibition was visited by over 22,000 persons. Public interest was largely aroused in the subject of technical instruction and the improvement on local industries. instruction and the improvement on local industries.

TIGER SHOOTING IN THE TERAI.—Mr. H. G. Ross, C.S., the Commissioner of Kumaon and Garhwal, has been out shooting in the jungles of the Terai for the last few days during his visit to that place on a tour of inspection. His Highness Rajah Hurry Raj Singh, of Kashipur, accompanied the Commissioner in his excursions, which were a complete successieven tigers were bagged, besides many heads of small game. Rajah Hurry Raj Singh, while on his way back through the jungles, shot two more tigers, one of which was ten feet three inches in length. The Rajah is an excellent shot, like his late father, his Highness the Hon. Rajah Sheoraj Singh Bahadur, CSI. C.S.I., who was credited with being one of the finest sportsmen among the Native nobility in India.

A TRADE DIFFICULTY AT CALCUTTA.—A month ago it was announced that the Calcutta exporters had formed a combination for the purpose of reducing the admixture of dirt in wheat and linseed. A fortnight later the terms of their agreement were formally adopted by the Wheat and Seed Trade Association. At that time the success of the combination accounts to be secured, as less on the percentage had been secured. Association. At that time the success of the combination seemed to be assured; sales on the new conditions had been made by the Natives; no great amount of opposition had been met with, and it was confidently believed that none could be successfully organised. Subsequently, however, the Native merchants took up a position of passive resistance, and refused to aid in moving the heavy crop of linseed which is awaiting transport to the coast. The business of the export houses thereupon generally came to a standstill, and the situation would probably in any case have ended in a compromise being sought by the combined English, German, and Greek firms which had signed the agreement. An abrupt termination of the struggle was, however, brought about by one of the firms suddenly giving way and purchasing linseed through their baniahs on the old conditions. The Englishman, commenting on this circumstance, says:—This independent action on the part of an English firm which, with the rest, had bound itself to "loyally carry out the arrangement in letter and spirit" has excited much indignation among the cosignatories, who have separately recorded in writing their condemnation of the proceeding, and have generally withdrawn from the arrangement. demnation of the proceeding, and have generally withdrawn from the agreement. This is the second occasion on which the endeavours of exporters to improve the quality of Indian wheat and seeds have been defeated, and it is a mortifying experience that the attempt should have been defeated in such a manner. It is clear that innovations in the export trade, to have any chance of success, must be adopted cordially by sellers as well as buyers, a fact which the latter have hitherto been slow to recognise.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

MAGAZINE THAT GIVES EXPRESSION TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PROPLE OF

INDIA.

INDIA.

There are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing montally (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian veople.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in. the native overs. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Roading-rooms, Librarios, and Institutes throughtout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

THE CALCUTTA REVIEW.

(The only Quarterly Review in India.)

ESTABLISHED 1844.

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiati. Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Statesman, October 1886.

. . . . The bost service which I ever randored in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done for more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name—J. W. KAYE, Athenmum Club, June 23 1872.

The Calcutta R view has given us valuable articles on the army Scn e from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophesy, of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.—Address of the C.-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

in The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Garette has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially intoresting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History, Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely open its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is susplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the Frensh; Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armites who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in Eng and regarding Military affairs.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, MAY 7, 1888.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 20th April; from Allahabad and Madras to the 18th April; and from Calcutta to the 17th April.

THE Viceroy arrived at Simla on the afternoon of the 14th ult.

LORD WILLIAM BERESFORD, the Military Secretary to the Viceroy, is about to take three months' leave.

SIRDAR DELAR JUNG, better known as Abdul Huq, Home Secretary to the Hyderabad Government, has been suspended, pending an explanation by him of his connection with the Hyderabad (Deccan) Mining Company. The suspension has caused a great deal of excitement in Bombay, as well as in Hyderabad.

LARGE public meetings have been held in various parts of Sind to protest against its annexation to the Punjab.

Two shocks of earthquake occurred at Deesa on April 15th.

THE loss of life caused by the tornado at Dacca has proved to be very great. On the banks of the river alone 300 bodies are reported to have been recovered.

THE police Sepoy, who recently ran amuck at Rajkote, has been sentenced to death.

THE settlement of the King of Oudh's estate has not yet been quite completed, but the Government of India have sanctioned the allotment of pensions aggregating nearly three lakhs yearly to certain members of the late King's family and his dependents.

MATERIAL trains can now be run through from Rangoon to Mandalay, the last rail having been laid on Saturday, April 14th.

THE Bengal military relief will this year be unusually large. Its publication will be deferred until the arrival of the Commander-in-Chief in Simla, which takes place on April 20th.

THE rumour that the Bangalore Division was to be reduced to a district or brigade is stated to be premature.

THE Bengal wheat crop is not expected to be more than a twelve anna one.

THE outbreak of cholera in Cashmere continues to be very severe.

LORD DUFFERIN will leave India in August. Lord Reay will act in his stead until the arrival of Lord Lansdowne.

SIR FREDERICK RICHARDS, R.N., Commander-in-Chief on the East India Station, has been relieved by Rear-Admiral Freemantle, and has proceeded to England.

CORRESPONDENCE regarding the transfer of Sind to the Punjab is still going on between the Bombay Government and the Government of India, after which the matter will be referred to the Secretary of State.

THE troops of the Sikkim Expeditionary Force are still hampered by bad weather. Heavy snowstorms have prevented a reconnaisance in force to the Jalep pass, and have interfered with the transport of supplies.

THE escort of Major Yates' delimitation party met with a good reception at Candahar on the 30th March, and reached Quetta, all well, on April 7th.

THE Viceroy and Commander in-Chief are at Simla. Sir Auckland Colvin is at Naini Tal, and Sir Stewart Bayley at Darjeeling. In Madras and Bombay also the annual Hill exodus has taken place, and the annual complaint that Simla is short of water has again been made.

THE designation of the Upper Burma Field Force from the 1st April has been changed to that of the "Upper Burma Force," and comprises the old 1st, 3rd, and 4th Brigades, and the Bhamo and Ruby Mine Commands. The 2nd Brigade has been included in the present 1st Brigade, and the present 4th Brigade takes in the Chindwin Command, and will be known as the 2nd Brigade.

THE Southern Shan Column came into Mandalay on the 9th April, after four and a-half months' march, all well. General Low rode out and welcomed the column back, saying that the political objects for which the expedition had been undertaken had been fully secured.

THE Duc d'Orleans' shooting party have bagged their twenty-first tiger; making the largest bag for five guns known for the last ten years. The Marquis de Mores shot one of them, and the Duc d'Orleans six.

The Duc d'Orleans shooting party has broken up, and the Duc, Prince Henri, the Marquis and Marquise de Mores, and Colonel Perseval are now in Calcutta. The Duc goes to Darjeeling for a short visit before joining the Rifles at Chakrata. Prince Henri, accompanied by Colonel Perseval, goes home via China, Japan, and America. The Marquis and Marquise de Mores go to Madras and the Nilghiris.

THE cultivation of tobacco is about to be undertaken at Quetta by the civil authorities, who believe that it could be made to grow successfully there.

MR HUGH FRASER, at present officiating as Magistrate of Banda, will take up the duties of Registrar of the Allahabad High Court upon Mr. J. B. Thomson proceeding on leave.

THE death of Colonel Ward, one of the secretaries to the North-West Government, was due to cirrhosis or shrinking of the liver. He was buried at Naini Tal with full military honours.

A BAD accident has occurred on the railway line, a few miles from Pyinmana station. A material train ran into a ballast train. Nine men were killed.

A HOUSE in Kyd-street, Calcutta, fell in on April 12th, killing seven persons and injuring five others.

SEVENTEEN artillery carbines have been stolen from the barracks at Quetta. The thieves managed to break the padlock and abstract the carbines from the rack in the room, although some twenty gunners were sleeping there at the time.

It appears that the accident which Sir Robert Sandemanmet with was not serious, His horse put its foot in a hole and rolled over, and Sir Robert injured his shoulder. Mr. Bruce, of the Political Department, has returned from leave, and is on his way to join Sir Robert Sandeman's camp at Lus Beyla.

OWING to increasing traffic the Madras Harbour Trust Board have tested, and are thoroughly renovating, the pier, under the superintendence of the Engineer of the Harbour Works. The whole structure is to be completely overhauled, and replanked closer than before. For the convenience of passengers two substantial teak siding ladders will also be substituted for the old rickety ones now in use.

THE proceeds from the sale of Bengal opium and twelve months' pass duty on opium exported from Bombay amount to Rs. 2,75,81,825, being Rs. 15,67,675 worse than the estimate. Of this deficiency Bengal is accountable for Rs. 42,600, and Bombay for Rs. 15,25,075.

On Colonel Laughton assuming charge as Commissary.

General of Transport in India in succession to Colonel Clifford, Major Clark Kennedy is appointed Principal Commissariat Officer at Mandalay.

COLONEL F. G. OLDHAM, Examiner of Accounts, Military Works, having taken six months' leave to England, will be succeeded by Mr. J. B. Braddon.

DR. VINCENT RICHARDS, Surgeon of the Eastern Bengal State Railway, and a well-known authority on snakes and snake poison, was experimenting with a cobra when it bit him on the index finger of the left hand. He promptly cut the finger down to the bone, applied permanganate of potash and nitric acid, and is now reported to be doing well.

OBITUARY.—Major-General Henry Maine Wilson, Bengal Staff Corps, at Pahlanpur, Kangra Valley; Colonel David Ward, Royal Engineers, at Naini Tal; Mr. W. F. Wiese, Superintendent of Telegraphs, Rajputana Division, at Ajmere.

NOTES.

THE papers to hand by the Overland Mail to-day are full of references to the Hyderabad (Deccan) business. The Pioneer, which boasts of having first called attention to the scandal, is particularly down upon Sirdar Diler-ul-Mulk, formerly known as plain Abdul Huq, and who has now been suspended from his position of Public Works Minister and Home Secretary to the Nizam.

This Abdul Huq is a Mahomedan Native of Callian, in the Bombay Presidency. He was educated by the late Dr. John Wilson, the well-known Bombay missionary, at his school in Girgaum, and he writes and speaks English fluently. He was nominated an Extra Assistant Commissioner in Berar, and when Sir Richard Mead was Resident at Hyderabad he was transferred by that officer's influence to the service of its State, and given charge of the Judicial and Political Departments. For his alleged services in capturing Wassadeo Bulwunt, the Mahratta dacoit, he received the order of the C.I.E. Shortly before the death of the late Sir Salar Jung he was deputed to Calcutta, and then to England, to negotiate for the sale of the Nizam's State Railway to a London company, a transaction which, according to the Pioneer, enabled him to pocket upwards of £80,000.

THE Allahabad journal, in mentioning the names of the directors of the "Hyderabad (Deccan) Company," says:—
"Lord Lawrence was to attend meetings of the Board in England, and keep the Government fully informed of its proceedings. Mr. George Batten is too well known (in India) to need identification; and should any fraudulent transaction in connection with the company be eventually brought home to some members of the Board, it may be at once concluded that he took no conscious part in them, and was simply, in common with the best of the State officials in Hyderabad, hoodwinked and misled. Mr. John Stewart, whose name always appears bracketed with that of Mr. Watson as Joint Cessionaire, is no longer living. He was a retired China merchant. Mr. Winter is a retired Bombay solicitor, a brother-in-law of Mr. Watson.

It is both fortunate and of happy augury for the future, says the journal in question, that his Highness the Nizam should have emerged from his partial seclusion at a moment when the affairs of his State seem to especially require the earnest and undivided attention of its ruler. It is possibly also of some significance that the change should be simultaneous with the appointment of a new Resident, with whom his Highness is represented to be on terms of wholesome confidence, and who appears already to be winning golden opinions from the patriotic party in Hyderabad. In Sir Asman Jah, the Prime Minister, and the Nawab Mahdi Ali, the Minister of Finance, both men of the highest personal character and unswerving loyalty, the Nizam is excellently surrounded. The measures which have culminated in the suspension of the Home Secretary seem to have been conducted with prudence and resolution. His Highness may certainly count on the support and encouragement of the British Government in the course upon which he has embarked, upon the sympathy of every Native State, and of every honest man in India, when all the circumstances of the case come to be fully known.

So far as the Viceroy in Council and his Foreign Secretary are concerned, the Pioneer declares that, from the ample means at its disposal, it has no hesitation in anticipating the public verdict that their dealings with Hyderabad during the last three or four difficult years have been altogether such as the best friends of the Government of India could desire. But, like the State of Hyderabad, they have been but ill served by some of those to whom interests of supreme importance were intrusted.

THIS is all very well, but the journal whose information is so valuable ought to be a little more explicit. Dealing merely in innuendos against individuals is not only cowardly but cruel. We should like to hear what Mr. Cordery and Colonel Marshall have to say about the whole business, including the question of the Rumbold claims. There is no doubt that a very ugly scandal has arisen, and the sooner that all suspicions are cleared up the better it will be for all concerned.

As the wish is generally supposed to be father to the thought, so the Times of India says that "the report current in the Punjab that the transer of Sind to that province has been actually decided upon is quite unwarranted. The question has periodically been the subject of active discussion for the last twenty years, and is once more passing through that phase. It may be that on the present occasion some final decision may be arrived at, but so far nothing has been settled. As to the statement that the matter has been decided, and all that now remained was the settlement of details, this is quite beyond the mark."

According to the Bombay Gazette retrenchment is the order of the day in French as well as in British India, but the Gaul is the more sweeping in his reductions. Rumours which come up from that far-away little Sleepy Hollow announce that the Grand Army of Pondicherry—the one Sepoy battalion—is to be reduced by at least a third, while the abolition of the High Court has actually been suggested. The Government of the colony is to be reduced from a second to a third-class appointment, and, of course, all the salaries are to be cut down.

On Wednesday, May 2nd, an unusual and interesting ceremony took place at the Persian Embassy. On that day the golden insignia of the Order of the Lion and Sun was presented to the Mirza Hussain Sharif by the Persian Ambassador, in the name of his Sovereign. The ceremony was of a very special character, for the decoration was sent by the Shah himself as an acknowledgment of the marked ability and patriotism of the distinguished recipient.

A correspondent writes to a contemporary:—"An arrangement for punkah working is in swing in a barrack at Camp bellpore which has been submitted to the notice of his Ex cellency the Commander-in-Chief, who arrived there on Thursday morning from Jhelum. The whole punkah system of one barrack is connected by a framework, through a slot in which works a bamboo pole. This pole hangs from the roof, and is heavily weighted at its lower extremity to secure that uniform pendulum movement adapted to keeping the punkahs in swing. The shotted end of the pole works in a groove let into the floor, and (with the exception of a slit to admit the pole) boarded over and fenced round to guard any indiscreet Tommy from an untimely knock. The punkah attachment is connected with the pole at a suitable height; and, as the tendency of the pole once set in motion is to oscillate, it is claimed that the advantage gained in power by the momentum of this pendulum is such, that by it one punkah puller can move the whole thirty-four (or more) fans as easily as a train of half-a-dozen punkahs by the ordinary method."

CALCUTTA, MAY 6.

A meeting of Mahamedans was held recently at Madras to vote a resolution condemning the so-called National Congress.

The son-in-law of the Prince of Arcot, who presided, referred to the address presented on behalf of all the Mahomedans in India to Lord Dufferin. He remarked that so unanimous and powerful a Mahomedan address had never before been prepowerful a Mahomedan address had never before been pre-pared in India. It was resolved that Lord Dufferin in both his private and his official capacity had given proof of a deter-mination to promote the welfare of all classes of the people, and had shown himself ever ready to sympathise with the Mahomedan community; and that by his departure the Moslem would sustain a great loss. Another resolution state that the most in located with the atmost discretification and that the meeting looked with the utmost dissatisfaction on a movement intended to create a small party, opposed to the great gathering in Calcutta, called to bid farewell to Lord Dufferin. It was also resolved that the Moslems of Madras Dufferin. It was also resolved that the Moslems of Madras regretted sincerely the departure of Lady Dufferin, in whom India would lose a true friend and a sincere benefactress, whose memory would ever be cherished, and whose name would be handed down to posterity. It was further resolved that for divers reasons any connection of the Mahomedans with the Congress was undesirable. Sir Syed Ahmed's position with reference to political matters was highly approved.

Considerable excitement has been recently caused at Madras by the refractory conduct of the Hindoo students at the Madras Christian College. A report had been circulated that one of the students intended to embrace Christianity. that one of the students intended to embrace Christianny. The majority of the students are Brahmins. The students became unruly, and hustled and insulted the professors. The members of one class were then suspended and fined, upon which 440 out of 640 students absented themselves, and these descriptions are subsequently joined by 100 more. They held deserters were subsequently joined by 100 more. They held meetings and drew up resolutions, demanding apologies and concessions, and announcing that they would not again attend the college until all their demands had been conceded. The students are said to be encouraged in their conduct by the students are said to be encouraged in their conduct by the Hindoo community, one merchant having stated that if necessary 60,000 rupees would be subscribed for the purpose of assisting the students to defy the college authorities. The college is a Scotch missionary institution, but special care is taken to avoid all attempts at proselytising. Commenting on the disturbance, a Madras newspaper remarks:—

"It must be confessed that the chief outcoming of the college has consisted of university graduates rather than Christian converts. The success of the college in making graduates is remarkable. If the Scotch people merely desire a number of graduates there is reason to be satisfied, but the college as an evangelizing agency is certainly not successful. The college has placed the Hindoos under incalculable obligations. The Government of India, as also the Madras Government, will be much concerned on finding tendencies unfavourable to discipline, and favourable to irreverence in the rising generation."

The explanation of the contumacious conduct of these re-fractory students is to be found in the constant preaching of the Native Press that revolt against all constituted authority is the paramount duty of every patriotic member of the Hindoo community.

Sir Lepel Griffin, in his last public speech prior to leaving India, strongly advocated the promotion of female education. The present state of things is very disheartening. The barriers of prejudice, prescription, and custom are too strong, and, in spite of the devoted labours of many noble hearted men, wrongs remain still unredressed, cruelty and brutality still triumph, and women still weep in Central India. The progress made is slow, the principal reason being the custom of early marriages. In the best schools of Central India the work done is indifferent, and the girls are only hunted to school when the approach of a British officer is signalled. The principal cause of opposition to the education of women in India is polygamy—an institution belonging both to the Hindu creed and to the Mahomedan. With this the British Government cannot interfere; it can only hope that the day may come when increasing enlightenment will induce the people to cast off their prejudices as a snake casts off its worn-out to east off their prejudices as a snake casts off its worn-out skin. But the Government may do much to forward the regeneration of woman. This task it hesitates to undertake. One section of the Penal Code is an insult on humanity and an outrage on civilisation, and it does more than any other legislative provision to degrade women. It is hoped that English public opinion will compel its repeal. Again, there is the question of the re-marriage of a widow, and especially of a

India has been visited by a series of phenomenal storms, partaking very much of the character of the Dacca tornado. At Moradabad 150 deaths are reported, caused chiefly by hail stones. Most of the houses were unroofed, trees were uprooted, and masses of frozen hail remained lying about long after the cessation of the storm. Telegraphic news received from Delhi states that there has been an extraordinary hail-storm lasting about two minutes, which was virtually a shower of lumps of ice. One of the hallstones picked up in the hospital garden weighed 1½lb., another secured near the telegraph office was of the size of a melon and turned the scale at 2lb. At another place the Government House suffered severely, 200 panes of glass being broken by hail. In Lower Bengal, at panes of glass being broken by hail. In Lower Bengal, at Rayebati, 2,000 huts were destroyed, while twenty persons are reported to have been killed and 200 severely injured.

Telegrams have been received from numerous points containing accounts of local tornadoes. Chudressur, close to Serampore, was almost completely wrecked. The storm only Serampore, was almost completely wrecked. The storm only lasted three minutes, its course extending for a mile and a half and its path being 300 yards wide. Its advent was preceded by a loud booming noise. Laage boats were lifted out of the river, and in one case a small boat was blown up into a tree.

From the official report of the Dacca tornado it appears that 118 persons were killed, excluding those drowned, and that 1,200 wounded were treated. The amount of the damage to property is estimated at Rs.6,78,428. Three hundred and fifty-gight, houses were completely destroyed 121 boats were eight houses were completely destroyed, 121 boats were wrecked, and 148 brick-built houses were partially and nine were completely destroyed. Shortly after the Dacca tornado another visited part of the Murchagunje subdivision, and sixty-six deaths and 128 cases of injury are reported. All the houses struck were completely destroyed. The Dacca tornado travelled altogether three miles and a quarter. Its rate of speed varied from twelve to twenty miles, and its greatest width was twenty yards. It was accompanied by a rumbling, hissing sound, the clouds over it were illuminated, and liquid mud was deposited along its track, and was ingrained in the wounds of the injured.

A large fire has occurred in one of the Port Commissioner's warehouses. The damage is estimated at Rs. 2,00,000, part of the property destroyed being uninsured.

It is stated that a telegram has been handed to the Hyderabad Government from Mr. Watson alleging that Abdul Hyderabad Government from Mr. Watson alleging that Abdul Huk received a quarter of the company's shares under a letter of permission from the Regent, and that the shares sold to the Nizam were purchased from Abdul Huk. The history of this letter is being investigated. Nawab Mehdi Ali has left for England, accompanied by Fardonji, private secretary to Sir Asman Tab.

Cholera has increased in Cashmere, 150 cases having occurred in Srinagar. A deficiency of Rs. 20,000 has been announced in the Srinagar Treasury.

The last telegram received from Madras reports the conclusion of the disturbances at the Christian College. The students have returned to the college, and twenty of the ringleaders have been fined.

Orders have been issued with reference to the Native army that as many men as will volunteer up to the maximum of 100 per regiment shall be passed into the Reserve, irrespective of the strength of the regiment.

It is rumoured that Holkar has proposed to make over the administration of the State to his mother, assisted by his uncle, Kasi Rao Doda, and Buxi Human Singh. Meanwhile his Minister, Ragunath Rao, remains at Madras. He became convinced that his schemes of reform were hopeless, and took advantage of the Maharajah's absence to leave Indore. The officials have been blamed for permitting the Dewan to leave. It is unlikely that he will return.

BURMA.

RANGOON, MAY 5.

Myinmu has again been successfully attacked by dacoits, Mynmu has again been successfully attacked by dacots, who burnt the police post, rescued a number of prisoners, and inflicted serious loss on the police. Since the late attack on the village a number of persons suspected of complicity in the affair have been arrested and confined in Myinmu. In order to rescue these prisoners the dacoits in considerable force attacked the post on the night of the 2nd inst. The police had an intimation of the intended attack. The dacoits, however, succeeded in mishing the post by impring over the wall. Then succeeded in rushing the post by jumping over the wall. They then fired the building, broke open the lock-up, and rescued the prisoners. In the fighting which occurred two Punjabees and six Burman police were killed and six Punjabees were wounded. The loss of the dacoits is unknown. When the prisoners attempted to escape from the lock-up the police fired into them and killed several. A simultaneous attack was and them and killed several. A simultaneous attack was made by dacoits on the other side of the village, and several houses were burnt. The officer commanding the military post in Myinmu, at a short distance from the police-station, hastened with some mounted infantry to the assistance of the police, but although he arrived within a quarter of an hour of the first shot being fired he was too late to catch the dacoits, who had retreated. The attempt to cut off their retreat failed owing to the darkness of the night and the difficult nature of the country. This second successful attack within a fortnight on a post held by soldiers and police on the river bank at a the country. This second successful attack within a fortnight on a post held by soldiers and police on the river bank, at a point easy of access and within three hours' journey of Man-dalay, shows how strong the forces of disorder in Upper Burma

An unfortunate incident is reported from Tavoy. The dacoit band which had menaced Tavoy attacked Douktouk, a village fifteen miles from the scene of their previous depredations. The dacoits were resisted by a loyal Karen Boh and his followers, who held the village until their ammunition was exhausted. The Karens then retreated across the river. While they were crossing, a body of Punjabee police advancing to attack the dacoits, mistaking the Karens for dacoits, fired a volley into them, wounding several. The Tavoy district is still in a disturbed state.

The local Government attaches much importance to Sir B. Frere's success in killing Botoke, one of the most formidable dacoit leaders.

It is impossible to give in detail the history of the numerous encounters recently reported with dacoits. The following incidents are mentioned in the official bulletin:—A band of dacoits 100 strong attacked a telegraph party at Tsagain. A party of police, led by the Deputy-Commissioner of Meiktela, successfully attacked the gang, killing eight, wounding several more, and capturing thirteen guns. In Pyinmana a small police post was burnt by dacoits and the arms were carried off. Several successful encounters with dacoits are reported from Myingyan. In the hills near Toungdwingyee a dacoit band 150 strong had a skirmish with the police. From Arrakan it is reported that the dacoit band which burnt Myohoung has been almost destroyed by the Deputy Commissioner.

An unfortunate affair is reported from the Kyoukse district, to the south-east of Mandalay. On the 4th inst. a party, consisting of Mr. O'Dowda, district superintendent of police, Lieutenant Williamson, of the Royal Munster Fusiliers, nine men of that regiment, and eight mounted policemen, was attacked by dacoits in a dense jungle near Lapaign. Mr. O'Dowda, Lieutenant Williamson, and two private soldiers were killed, one private was severely wounded, and the others of the party were forced to retreat. Subsequently a military reinforcement skirmished through the jungle, but failed to recover the bodies. General Low has sent Brigadier-General Wolseley to Choungwe, near the point where the attack occurred, with orders to take immediate action against the band of dacoits. An unfortunate affair is reported from the Kyoukse district, band of dacoits.

Additional troops have been sent to the Tavoy district, which is very disturbed. North of Tavoy an Alaungpra pretender has appeared, flying the peacock flag, and carrying a white

From Bhamo it is reported that the Kachyens lately attacked Mogoung, but were repulsed with a loss of fourteen killed and captured. This report, which reached Bhama through Natives, requires confirmation.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

THE "KINGDOM" OF BOMBAY. (Pioneer.)

All classes and creeds are alike interested in a policy (the transfer of Sind to the Punjab) which strikes a mortal blow at the future growth and prosperity of the Kingdom of Bombay.—Times of India, April 5th.

Who are they that bluff and blow among the mudbanks of their harbour?

Making mock of Upper India where the High Gods live alway? Grey rats of Prince's Dock—more dull than cysters of Colaba-Apes of Apollo Bunder—yea, bacilli of Back Bay!

-SWINBURNE (adapted).

They met with one accord and a simultaneous grasp on the Central Indian plateau: each one carried gingerly and at arm's length a cutting from the Times of India. Together they cried:—"Have you seen this?" And a second time:—"Have you seen this!"

Bengal was voted into the chair. And the Punjab supported, but the Punjab was hot-headed. "There's only one course open to us," he said, buckling on his sword. "We must court-martial him." "Better send a set of resolutions," said Bengal. "I don't think resolutions would touch the peculiar mental condition of my esteemed neighbour," said Madras dreamily. "Prod him with a pen," grunted the North-West savagely. "At any rate, get him up here and ask him what in the world or out of it he means by it."

So they made a long arm and picked Bombay out of his office, the cotton-waste in his hair, by the slack of his ducks, and set him down on the table with a thump. "What's that for?" said Bombay sulkily, for Bombay is quick to think his dignity scratched. "For!" "For!" said the Punjab. "For impertinence—dashed impertinence, Sir." "You Frontier men are so coarse," said Bengal; "let us preserve the decencies of debate. Bombay, you are charged by this assembly with—'pon my honour, gentlemen, I can't hit on the proper word." "Exaggerated estimate of personal worth," suggested Madras, who was always polite. "Yes—thinking yourself a small sun and moon and universe combined," said the North-West. "Yes, and saying that your quill-drivers were better than my Civilians—mine d'you hear—men who were making history when you were gambling in cotton-shares, you dissipated dalal," said the Punjab. "Yes,—and calling yourself a Kingdom, you fluffy, stuffy little provincial," said Bengal with awful gravity. And they all shouted together:—"Calling yourself a Kingdom. Who made you a ruler among men?" gal; "let us preserve the decencies of debate. Bombay, you ruler among men?"

"Gentlemen," said Madras, "let us conduct the trial without heat. It is possible that the prisoner's brain may have been unhinged by the peculiar circumstances of his environ-ment. On one side, we have a Governor who feeds it with"— "Qoorma," interupted the Punjab. "What's that?" said Bom-

"Qoorma," interupted the Punjab. "What's that?" said Bombay. "Talk the vernacular to your Goanese boys and then you'll know. Go on, Madras."

"Who feeds it with butter, and on the other a Royal Duke for a Commander-in-Chief. These things, I submit, may have conduced to an intensification of the self-esteem which——"

"Bosh!" said the Punjab. "I know the man you mean. He was with me at Pindi for a while, but he didn't disorganise me. I didn't say I was a kingdom." "It can't be Lord Reay," said Bengal. "Now if the Viceroy had been down there, telling everyone that they were the finest men in Asia I could have understood it." "It's just Bombay's blessed conceit," said the North-West. "I went through there the other day and they wanted to know what Simla thought of their Municipal Bill." "I wish you up-country men would talk in a more dignified way," said Bengal. "We're in the presence of a Kingdom, you know."

"'Hear I pray you this dream which I have dreamed'" quoted Madras who had always taken an interest in missions." "And his brethren said unto him: shalt thou indeed reign over us?" Oh Bombay Bombay we've been next-door neigh-

"And his brethren said unto him: shalt thou indeed reign over us?" Oh Bombay, Bombay, we've been next-door neighbours for a longer time than I care to think about, and I never expected to find you making such an exhibition of yourself."

"It's amazing immorality of the creature that bothers me," said the North-West. 'Future growth and prosperity of the Kingdom of Bombay!' Are you mad or what?"

"That is not the way to discuss an important public question," said Bombay angrily. "I base my claims to superiority on the fact of my being, in short, Bombay."

"Thank Heaven there's only one of 'em," said Bengal. "Fancy the Empire filled with us fellows calling ourselves kingdoms! Well, my King, what next?" "I am Bombay and and I'm not going to be laughed at," reiterated the prisoner. "Yes, you are Bombay, and considering your pretensions, you own some of the worst hotels in Asia," answered the North-West. "You can't talk the vernaculars; you say: 'Hi! got it? when you ask for anything; your servants are bad; got it? when you ask for anything; your servants are bad; your capital could be blown into the blue by a decent sized iron-clad; and your Army List could be put into the Bengal one without increasing the postage; your districts are as quiet as water-gruel and about as uninteresting; you have the worst climate in India, and excepting you yourselves, not a soul east of Ahmedabad cares what you say or do or think unless you happen to be quarrelling with your Magistrates. You're useful to us, as a half-way house on the road Home."

"I go to Karachi," said the Punjab, "and when I've got Sind never mind what I'll do. Look here, my King, in addition to everything my honourable friend here may have addition to everything my honourable friend here may have said, I want to point out to you that you are as naked as a pigeon-squab. I, and Bengal here, own the troops, and do the rough work. I and Bengal deal with the tribes on our frontier—'EHA's' tribes are good enough for you. I and Bengal are the two people who are listened to when there is anything to be done, and I and Bengal are the people indented upon. Now we've never called ourselves anything more than Province and Presidency, but, when we speak, people stop talking and say:—'What's that ?' You aren't the Boston of the Empire, though you may be if you live long enough and grow humble. You aren't the Washington either. Simla is that, and I own Simla.

You are the Saratoga, if what they say of Poona is correct; but even Poona, and the Duke, and an academical L. G.—I beg his pardon 'Guv'nor'—doesn't justify you in making such an outrageous ass of yourself. You and your 'deadly blows!' Aren't you ashamed of yourself, Bombay? You'll never hear the end of this—my uncrowned King. It's such bad form too. What would you say if I called myself a Kingdom? I'm the warden of it. You're only the stevedore—the underwriter"

"I don't care," said Bombay sulkily. "I abide by what I have said. You in the Mofussil can't be expected to understand the enormous advantages which I possess. Turning to have said. You in the Mofussil can't be expected to understand the enormous advantages which I possess. Turning to the study of my most recent piece of civic legislation——"

"That's what has turned his head," said Bengal. "Listen, King. I've got a municipal bill fifteen times as unworkable as yours. Do L call myself a Kingdom on the strength of it? No, I write to the Englishman."

"The Press of Western India has long led the public opinion of the Empire," said Bombay.

The assembled board looked at each other and groaned. "What can you do with hide-bound crassness of this sort? That comes of filling the educational department with Scotchmen," said Madras. "Bombay, do you recognise the enormity of your offence?" "No." "Nor the absurdity of it?" "No."

"Very good," said Bengal. "The sentence of this Court is that the Kingdom shall abide by his words if he can and they will. He shall eat the issue of the Times of India of the 5th April, 1888... advertisements and all. The Court will carry the sentence into effect.

"But, gentlemen," pleaded the prisoner, "this is not the manner to approach a great public question. There is a levity—a lack of statesmanship. It is not argument."

"Can't help that. If you behave like a bumptious schoolboy you must be treated as such. Will you begin on the inner or outer sheet?"

"In referring to the Kingdom of Bombay, the intelligent or outer sheet?"

"In referring to the Kingdom of Bombay, the intelligent reader will at once understand," said the prisoner—

"Hold his nose, he's speaking between his teeth! Now!"

"That it was a misprint—a misprint—a lapsus pennae—regrettable incident! Gentlemen! printer's ink is deadly poison," shrieked the maltreated Presidency.

"Let him go," said Bengal. "We'll accept that as an apology."

"What I hate about Bombay," said the Punjab, as he slued his Sam Browne belt straight, "is the way he wriggles out of everything. Why couldn't he have said that at first?" everything. Why couldn't he have said that at first?"
"Wanted to see whether we'd stand it or overlook it I suppose," said Bengal.

"Well," said the North-West grimly, "he's got his answer."

TRADE AND SUPERSTITION.

(Pioneer.)

A curious instance of superstition standing in the way of trade and a people's advancement is mentioned in the report on the administration of Assam for last year. It was dis-covered some time ago that a magnificent forest of rubber trees existed in the vicinity of Borduk, in the country of the Abors, a tribe on the extreme north-east frontier of Assam, which has given a good deal of trouble at times, but of late years has been kept fairly well in hand by the tact of our Political Officers at Sadya. It also happened that last year the price of rubber rose considerably, and when the fact of the existence of the Abor forest got abroad traders from the more civilised Singphos and Khamptis immediately began to enter into negotiations with the Abors for permission to proceed up. into negotiations with the Abors for permission to proceed up the Dihong and tap the trees. At this point, however, Mr. Needham, the Assistant Political Agent, had to inferfere and persuade the traders to return, lest worse should befall them. The Abors, it appears, believe that the rubber tree is the abode of a great and powerful sylvan spirit, and Mr. Needham is convinced that all of them, except a few who are civilised enough to put a bribe above even a sylvan spirit, would resent any attempt at hacking it about. Until, therefore, this airy deity can be persuaded to remove his abode to some less valuable tree, the wealth of rubber among the Abors must remain untouched. Curiously enough, there is a very similar superstition among the West Indian negroes regarding the ceibe or silk enters the term which they believe the term less than the contract of the term less than the term less than the contract of the term less than the term les ceiba or silk cotton tree, which they look on as the temple of Jumbi and the proper home of Obeah, and the bark of which no right-minded black will wound. The planters of the West Indies, however, are not imbued with that scrupulous tenderness for barbarous sentiment which marks our political, and the ceiba has had to go by the ground whenever it was needed or in the way, the blacks assisting in the work of desecration being well dosed with rum to give them courage to defy the devil. Were such methods of encroaching on superstition tried here we should have a hundred questions in Parliament before a year was out; the Secretary of State would arise in his wrath, the daring Political would be "squelched," and the sylvan spirit would be re-established amid a salvo of humanistic artillery.

THE INCOME TAX IN BURMA. (Mandalay Herald.)

We think that the introduction of the taxgatherer into Upper Burma is not only premature, but injudicious. The country is not yet in such a state that a man can tell exactly what his expenditure will be; and it is known that, in a large number of cases, incomes up here are hardly sufficient to enable both ends to be brought together. Again, a very large number of men are temporary hands, engaged for or transferred to Upper Burma, for certain duties on certain salaries. To defraud these men, in this manner, when we are still living in a country in which the pax Brittanica does not obtain, and the heavy increase in expenses is by no means met by the small increases sanctioned under various special heads, this course is a distinct swindle on the part of the financial advisers to the Government of India, if not on the part of the Government itself. "Another injustice to Ireland!" It seems that with one thing and another Burney may ultimately be to the Government of India, if not on the part of the Government itself. "Another injustice to Ireland!" It seems that, what with one thing and another, Burma may ultimately become a species of Oriental Ireland. We never particularly loved the Indian Government, whose piper we have frequently had to pay; we once mildly asked for Separation, and the Government, apparently annoyed at the mere idea of our dreaming of becoming a Crown Colony, have refused to make us even a Lieutenant-Governorship. The Government Service, never particularly popular in Burma, will become even less so; and the unfortunate officials, already underpaid in many instances, will learn once more the costliness of doing anything for the State. There is only one garrison of consolation for the general public, that this notification only affects Government employés. Our time has not yet come; but it cannot be far distant. We object to the Income-tax generally, as a tax at once impertinent, harassing, and inequitable—the latter, in that honest men are mulcted, while rogues go free. Looking at the small sum that will be collected, and the amount of friction that will be inevitably engendered, we hardly think the adoption of this plan quite politic under present circumstances. However, it is only on all fours with the average sapiency of the Indian Government, an institution in which we have long since lost all belief, and for which—collectively—we have even less respect. It seems, in every possible way, to be gathering up enemies, even unnecessarily and gratuitously; undeterred by the ominous signs of general dissatisfaction among all classes, it is now trying to sour the affections of its own hantlings. And this is the Government dissatisfaction among all classes, it is now trying to sour the affections of its own bantlings. And this is the Government that will call upon us in the hour of need, and will, when the danger is over, recommence the skinning process.

LORD CONNEMARA AND THE P. AND O. COMPANY.

(Madras Mail.)

As his Excellency the Governor was for many years a director of the P. and O. Company he should be well suited to bring pressure to bear on his late colleagues to induce them to think better of the arrangements they are making for remodelling their Indian Service. There is now, we regret to hear, reason to apprehend that if the Madras Government and the Madras public do not bestir themselves in the matter, the directors will, at an early date, refuse to let their steamers call at Madras at any time in the year. At present it is arranged that "during the off passenger season, the company's Calcutta steamers outwards and homewards will omit calling at Madras in order to give a much improved service to Calcutta," but it will be easy for the directors, on the plea of still further improving the Calcutta service, to take another step, and to ignore Madras altogether! For the present a sop in the shape of a free railway ticket from any station on the direct main line of the Madras Railway between Madras and Raichore is thrown by the company to the Madras Corberus, but the inconvenience of the railway journey, especially to ladies and children, is considerable, and it will be found that Madras families will not, as a rule, care to avail themselves of the concession, but will prefer to embark in steamers of other companies that call at Madras. The directors are free, it may be said, to do what they will with their own; but they draw a large subsidy from the State, and they are not morally free to sacrifice the public convenience of Anglo-India to considerations of freight. The policy that they are adopting is exceedingly short-sighted. It is not only in Madras that the company is losing credit, for great indignation is felt in the North of India, and a "Field Officer" writes to the Pioneer as follows:—

"The travelling public owe their thanks to 'L.S.S.' for starting the subject, and to the editor for facilitating discussion will be easy for the directors, on the plea of still further im-ing the subject, and to the editor for facilitating discussion and combination. May I suggest that the most effectual plan by far will, however, be to encourage the present scheme of the French Messageries Maritimes to run a fortnightly steamer to and from Bombay? Memorials to the Directors of the

P. and O. will undoubtedly be treated with as much indifference, as it may seem safe to manifest; whereas the presence of a very serious rival in the field will compel them to amend their ways or suffer a total loss of their present passenger traffic. The M.M. assert they can undertake to do the passage from Bombay to Marseilles in twelve days. If they can and if they will start it, the P. and O. must break or bend; and whichever happens will be a public gain. I suggest, therefore, that memorialists should also address the French Consuls in Calmutta and Bombay positing out the great discretization with cutta and Rombay, pointing out the great dissatisfaction with the present P. and O. arrangements and extortions; and pointing out that as its present monopoly of the passenger traffic is solely due to its being as yet slightly the quickest mode of passage, that any rival with still further accelerated speed would probably 'sweep the board.' As an instance of the P. and O. treatment of passengers: In 1884 I sent to take a P. and O. treatment of passengers: In 1884 I sent to take a three months' return ticket via Brindisi as advertised. being quarantine in Egypt against Italy, I intended returning via Trieste, and made the above request with my eyes open. On arrival in Bombay a few hours before sailing, I found they had issued me a ticket—home via Brindisi, and out by long sea. I was far too busy to call and point out that I did not require the latter, but on the day of my arrival in London I called at the office, and told them I did not require a berth via Cibreltar, had never asked for one and would join the steamer Gibraltar, had never asked for one, and would join the steamer at Suez. This was duly noted, but I was referred to the Bom-bay Office for a refund of the overcharge. On joining the steamer at Suez, I found that my berth had been occupied up steamer at Suez, I found that my berth had been occupied up to Malta by another passenger, but despite this fact, and my having been supplied with a ticket I had never applied for, all refund of the overcharge was most ungraciously refused. I may add that I sent a statement of this duly signed to one of the leading Bombay papers, but it was never inserted."

The writer of the above letter should not have taken the "no" of the Bombay Office for an answer. Last November a Madrassee arrived in Bombay and solicited from the local P. and O. Office a refund of the amount he had paid six months previously for a through railway ticket from Brindis to London, which he had been unable to use. The coupons of the Railway Companies were in a case, were undated, and the Railway Companies were in a case, were undated, and were perfectly free from stain or other hindrance to their rewere perfectly free from stain or other hindrance to their re-issue. The Madrassee had conceived that the Office would immediately refund the money, after deducting a small sum as commission for its trouble, in the same way as Messrs. Cook and Sons invariably do with regard to unused coupons returned to them. But the Bombay Office could not dream of doing such a reasonable thing, and as the Superintendent was firm in his refusal to follow the practice of Cook, the Madrassee protested, a reference was made to the London Office, and the money was refunded without another word.

Colonel Browne, Secretary to the Bengal Government in the Public Works Department, has left Calcutta, on retire-ment. Major Harrison, Joint Secretary, carries on the duties of the office pending Colonel Luard's arrival from leave.

THE Englishman publishes a letter from Narail, in the Pubna District, describing the effect of a storm which occurred there on March 27th. The correspondent says that seventeen deaths have been ascertained, and 1,000 people were injured, and adds that several villages have been practically ruined, and that the people are suffering severe hardship. It is curious that the Pubna district report, published in the Government Gazette, makes no mention of the storm or distress.

THERE are various changes taking place just now among the doctors of Calcutta. Dr. Harvey, Professor of Midwifery in the Medical College Hospital, goes home on leave immediately, and is succeeded by Dr. Joubert, who has several times before officiated in the appointment. This leaves vacant the Civil Surgeoncy of the 24-Pergunnahs, which will be taken up by Dr. Russell. Othet changes are the transfer of Dr. Murray from the General Hospital to Champarun; Dr. Comins, from Mymensingh, succeeding him in Calcutta. Dr. Boville, from Champarun, goes to Cuttack to relieve Dr. Stewart, who is about to take leave. Stewart, who is about to take leave.

Mr. H. FARRER, Postmaster-General, returned to Madras on Monday morning, April 9, from Mysore and Bangalore, having completed his tour in connection with the amalgamation of the Mysore post with the Imperial post. THE Deccan Times writes:-The new lines are being completed at a remarkably low rate of cost, the estimate, exclusive of rolling-stock, amounting to only £3,943 per mile, "a price," the chief engineer adds, "at which, I may confidently assert, no board gauge lines in India have yet been completed." The original line from Wadi to Hyderabad cost Rs.1,75,585 per mile, with rolling-stock. It is difficult to understand how this great difference in the cost of constructing the two divisions of the line has been brought about. The company is said to have had "disappointing difficulties to overcome," and yet the chief engineer is able to report "a saving on the original estimates of the cost of construction of the whole line from Secunderabad to the frontier of about £94,000."

"It will be within the recollection of some of our readers," observes the Deccan Times, "that the relations between the Council of State and the ex-Minister, Sir Salar Jung, were so unsatisfactory that a set of rules was drawn up, and received the approval of the Resident, to regulate the conduct of business in the Council and to define its powers. These rules came up for consideration before the Council at its last meeting, when the Nizam presided in person. On the subject being brought forward his Highness took up the draft rules, ran his pen through them with the remark, that however advisable such rules were in relation to Sir Salar Jung ever advisable such rules were in relation to Sir Salar Jung. they were altogether unnecessary so long as Sir Asman Jah held the office of Dewan.

The death of Colonel David Ward, R.E., Chief Engineer and Joint Secretary to Government in the Public Works Department of the North - West Provinces, is announced. Colonel Ward entered the old Bengal Engineers in September, 1854, and saw a good deal of service in the Mutiny being present at the siege and assault of Delhi, the defence of the Alumbagh, the siege and capture of Lucknow, and other affairs. Thereafter his career was on more peaceful lines. He was in his fifty-fourth year at the time of his death, and had only held his appointment under the Local Government since February, 1887.

A most unfortunate accident happened on the rifle range of the Royal Sussex Regiment, at Rawul Pindi, when a young and promising soldier, Private Gilham by name, was shot through the back, and died almost immediately. It seems that he had gone out from the marker's butt, with a danger flag in his hand, to the target, and with a squad firing at a very long range had not been certain that the "cease fire" had sounded. The "commence" and "cease fire" have often to be sounded three or four times with squads firing at these long ranges when the wind is in the wrong direction. NATIVE PRESS.

THE RETIREMENT OF MR. PEDDER.

(Rast Goftar.)

News has been received here of the retirement of Mr. W. G. Pedder, C.S.I., from the Revenue Secretaryship at the India Office. True to the general feature of his work in active life, Mr. Pedder's retirement has been quiet and unostentatious, with the natural result that it has not drawn half as much attention as the event would have in the case of another functionary of social importance. tionary of equal importance. We, however, who had watched Mr. Pedder's career in India with interest, and been informed of the excellent solid work he had been doing at the India Office, cannot omit expressing our regret at the somewhat abrupt termination of an official life, the antecedents of which had left considerable scope for a future full of cheerful promise. We have had it on the evidence of eye-witnesses that mise. We have had it on the evidence of eye-williams. Mr. Pedder was as industrious at his desk at the office in Whitehall as he had been in the Indian mofussil in his younger years and thereafter at the Customs and Municipal offices. The result of this industry showed considerable judgment on the part of the authority at whose instance a civilian officer was part of the authority at whose instance a civilian officer was translated, in the midst of his Indian career, to a life of activity in England in a field in which it was admitted an efficient worker could not be found on the spot. Mr. Pedder's selection was more than vindicated by the excellent work done by him only too faithfully and zealously, for we share the belief that his robust constitution would not have yielded as it did except under an unusually heavy strain. It was impossible for us at this distance to follow aren the main insidents of his official this distance to follow even the main incidents of his official life in England, and we consequently feel unable to enter on a critical review of it. We know, however, it has been conceded to be a success by those able to pass judgment thereon. We have proof also of Mr. Pedder's diligent activity in matters which, though not strictly falling within the scope of his offiwhich, though not strictly falling within the scope of his official duties, claimed his attention owing to their intimate connection with this country. Although of a retiring disposition he was foremost in tendering help and hospitality, and in trying to be of genuine service to any of our countrymen who had the good fortune to make his acquaintance, while the journals of the Society of Art and other learned bodies during recent years have testified to the assiduous care and industry with which he worked to bring into prominence Indian questions before the English public. We deplore the untimely end of a career which was thus both publicly and privately of conspicuous, if undemonstrative, usefulness, and deplore it the more that it should have been allowed to slide into retirement inadequately honoured and recompensed. For, after the inadequately honoured and recompensed. For, after the recent lavish waste of Indian distinctions, as exampled by the knighting of the Mehmandar at the India Office and the Superintendent of the Agra Jail, who can say that the C.S.I. of Mr. Pedder was not a meagre reward of valuable services rendered over a long period and in various positions of importance and trust? We do not know what qualifications have recommended Sir Charles Bernard as Mr. Pedder's successor. It may turn out an excellent selection or it may not, but of this we are sure that in passing over Mr. Wollaston, the authorities at the India Office have robbed their revenue department of the controlling and guiding energy of one who has not only been an efficient and guiding energy of one who has not only been an efficient second to Mr. Pedder himself, but whose experience in the political branch of the Service, and whose knowledge of more than one Oriental language, mark him out as one especially. fitted to be placed in a position of dignity and responsibility.

THE NATIVE PRESS ON THE AFFAIRS OF KASHMIR.

The vernacular papers of Lahore, with one or two exceptions, highly approve of the removal of Dewan Lachman Dass from the post of Prime Minister of Jammoo and Kashmir

The following summary of their views will serve to show that the late Dewan was far from being popular.

The Imperial paper of Lahore, after announcing the dismissal of the Dewan "with great pleasure," remarks that during his short tenure of the post of Madarulmaham, Lachduring his short tenure of the post of Madarumanam, Lachman Dass had usurped all power in the State, reducing his master, the Maharaja, to a mere puppet. He did all in his power to offend the Maharaja by setting his orders at nought. The hostility between the Maharaja and his Dewan knew no bounds; whenever the Maharaja appointed any person to anoffice in the State the Dewan would either dismiss or bring. office in the State the Dewan would either dismiss or bring him into trouble by preferring some charge or other against him. It is true that the Dewan enjoyed considerable popularity among the Europeans. This popularity was not the only thing that the Dewan required; what he required was popularity among the Kashmiris. He, however, cared to gain popularity among the Europeans and entirely neglected his duty to his master and the people of Kashmir. The writer, after taking to task some of the supporters of the Dewan, remarks that the news of his dismissal has been received with a sense of relief by all who take an interest in the affairs of the State. The writer concludes by expressing his satisfaction at the reconciliation which has taken place between satisfaction at the reconciliation which has taken place between the Maharaja and his brother.

The Rafiq-i-Hind of Lahore also takes a similar view, but the Raylet-Hind of Lanore also takes a similar view, but strongly condemns the appointment of the Maharaja's brothers to conduct the affairs of the State. Both the brothers of the Maharaja, says the Raig, are unfit for the appointment of Prime Minister on account of their limited education and want of experience. If the Government of India really desires to save the State from the utter ruin which it is the content of the green mismangement of the late. threatened, owing to the gross mismanagement of the late Dewan, it should lose no time in urging on the Maharaja the appointment of competent Native officials from British India

The Khairkhwaih Kashmir has a rather lengthy article on the subject, in which it states that Dewan Lachman Dass gave a nautch party on the day of his dismissal to show that he did not care about his dismissal; and ridicules the idea that Mr. Plowden can help the Dewan in any way. The Maharaja, continues the writer, has as much power to dismiss Lachman Dass as he had to dismiss Gobind Sahai. The Maharaja and his hardan as a lee Pair Moti no longer contains. Dass as ne nad to dismiss Gobind Sanai. The Maharaja and his brothers, as also Raja Moti, no longer care to see Lachman Dass holding the post of Prime Minister: nor do they care to bring about a reconciliation with him. Under these circumstances any interference on the part of Mr. Plowden will lead to results the reverse of desirable. The writer calls upon all the Civil and Military Officers, Raises and merchants, Hindus and Mohanadans to the advantage of the careacter. and Mahomedans, to take advantage of the approaching visit of his Excellency the Viceroy, and submit a memorial giving an account of the tyranny of the Dewan, and the favours conferred on them by his Highness the Maharaja, and the bad results which have followed Mr. Plowden's unjustifiable interference.

The Delhi Punch of Lahore publishes the first of a series of articles purporting to give an account of the circumstances which have led to the removal of the Dewan. The writer also promises to disclose in future issues what it calls the wild schemes the Maharaja is in the habit of indulging in, wild schemes the Maharaja is in the habit of indulging in, against the British Government and the people of Kashmir. "The Maharaja does not like to be away from the society of astrologers and other selfish people. Government cannot be unaware of what he has been doing from the time he was heir-apparent up to this moment against the Government and the members of his own family. The Maharaja has always been hostile to his brothers, and has never left any stone unturned to deprive Rajah Ram Singh of his legitimate rights. He likes to waste the State treasury in rewarding the Pandits and Joshis and other unworthy people who manage to please his Highness by predicting the downfall of the British Government and the death of the members of his own family. Dewan Lachman Dass did his best to disabuse the Maharaja's mind of Lachman Dass did his best to disabuse the Maharaja's mind of all such ideas in the interests of the State by order of the Resident. The Dewan's efforts, however, proved unsuccessful, and so far incensed his Highness as to induce him to dismiss the Dewan at once." As an instance of the Maharaja's attachment to Sawal Singh, the writer states that the son of Sawal Singh recently the provided and that the partitions Sawal Singh recently shot a man dead, and that the partisans of the Maharaja, instead of sending up the case for trial in the court of the Wazir, have managed to transfer the case to the court at Jammoo. They also tried to bribe the relations of the deceased to induce them to give up the prosecution of the case. In conclusion, the Delhi Punch calls upon the Resident to inquire into the circumstances of this case

TRAVELS IN ARABIAN DESERTS.*

"The tunic was rent on my back, my mantle was old and torn, the hair was grown under my kerchief to the shoulders, and the beard fallen and unkempt; I had bloodshot eyes half blinded, and the scorched skin was cracked to the quick upon my face." Such is Mr. Doughty's account of himself after a my face." Such is Mr. Doughty's account of himself after a two years' residence in the heart of Arabia, during which lengthened period he carried his life in his hand every turn; for, be it noted, he did not travel incognito, but openly avowed on every occasion that he was a "Nasrani," or Christian, and the dangers which he underwent were startling to a degree. the dangers which he underwent were startling to a degree.

Again and again people came up to his tent eager and anxious to murder the hated "Kafir;" often and often the bigoted Muslims hissed curses between their teeth as they passed the detested "faringhi," and would have slain him on the spot had not some friendly arm and kindly voice been raised to defend the "voyager." Yet Mr. Doughty never receded an inch from the position he assumed at the first; he never recanted his faith even when to all human appearance a profession of the faith, even when to all human appearance a profession of the Muhammadan religion would have ensured him peace and safety. It is true that in one instance he repeated the formula, "there is no God but God," to the intense delight of his opponents; but he steadily refused to add the conclusion of the formula, "and Muhammad is his apostle."

It would fill peace to except a tithe of the strange educations of the formula, "and Muhammad is his apostle."

It would fill pages to quote a tithe of the strange adventures which befel him every hour of the day, nor would it be easy to compress into any reasonable space the various curious facts which he records; for chapter after chapter is replete with marvellous experiences. The whole narrative is so fresh, so unlike anything previously published, that the reader seems in a new world, and the mind is dazzled with the galaxy of unexpected incidents and unlooked-for occurrences. Who would expect to find Manchester cotton goods or Norwegian matches in the heart of the Arabian Peninsular? Who would suppose that the Arabs see no difficulty in putting into would suppose that the Arabs see no difficulty in putting into practice the whole duty of man as embodied in the precept, "to love the Lord with all thy heart, with all thy soul, with all thy strength, and thy neighbour as thyself." The first portion of the injunction is the daily delight of every true son of the desert, who never omits the prayer to the Creator, who makes and systains all the creatures of his hand; and in a land where the rites of hospitality are so sacred as to overcome the demands of "blood," it does not seem to be very difficult to love one's neighbour as oneself.

It is, perhaps, not very unexpected to learn that the Arabs are enormous drinkers of tea and smokers of tobacco, but sixty cups of the delicious beverage in one day, interspersed with a like number of pipes, is somewhat startling! It is also calculated to occasion surprise when one is told the enormous amount of "croton oil" and laudanum which persons consumed without detriment to the welfare of their inward parts. strangest of all, is the curious fact that the women—such is the vanity of the sex—prefer to ride in ornamental but enormously uncomfortable litters rather than use her showy but more suitable "compositions." And the reason? Only this, that they "would ride gallantly," and this in the middle of the desert, with no more than sand and sun to look down upon such pretentious finery and such preposterous love of ostentaion and display.

* "Travels in Arabian Deserts." By Charles M. Doughty. (Cambridge University Press).

It only remains to refer to the language in which Mr. Doughty clothes his ideas. To say that it is strange conveys no just idea of its peculiarity. Shooting is "gunning" ambitious is "climbing," liberal is "fool-large," behind is "hindward." Then there is "old multiplier," to indicate a man with a large family; friends are "tepid," that is, lukewarm; covenants are "brittle," and so on; while the general narrative is so crude and unpolished that at times it needs a second perusal to arrive at the meaning of the author. But, with all this, the work must take rank amongst the most remarkable book of travels of the present century. Who or what is Mr. Doughty we know not, but we welcome him as one of the most interpid of the most protections one of the most water and one travellers, one of the most venturesome of wanderers, and one of the most entertaining of guests.

MARAHUNA.*

"I am not made of humanity stuff." Such is Marahuna's description of herself—and true, indeed, is the estimate thus given of a being to whom anger, sorrow, pity, jealousy, love, are each and all unknown! Who is she? What is she? Devoid of the great human emotions, she is an enigma of enigmas—a. "flame maiden." She is found in a sea of fire; her origin, her life—in short, everything connected with her is mysterious and weird. But her ways and doings are handled with consummate artistic skill. She comes to England, and, unearthly as is her nature, she passes through a variety of scenes artlessly and without pain-giving emotions. But the occasion of a fire rouses in this strange being feelings which betray her unnatural origin. What most people dread she enjoys; what ordinary creatures fear she courts. Flames to her are "harmless as doves," sparks are powerless to injure, heat cannot scorch, nor can fire parch. Well, indeed, may her admirers strive, and strive in vain, to solve such an insoluble mystery. "I am not made of humanity stuff." Such is Marahuna's mystery.

The tone of this remarkable novel is, it need scarcely be said, of a nature much akin to the favourite "She." It is the very embodiment of the marvellous; all that is uncampy and unearthly is pressed into the service of the author, who, possessing fine powers of description and an imagination fertile beyond the realms of fancy, is able to produce a series of "powerful situations." Interest never flags; the reader is kept in burning excitement from the first page to the last, but, to our judgment, it is a debased school of romance and fiction. We never divest ourselves of the supernatural; we perpetually fail to picture the heroine as a real live being with feelings, sympathies, and instincts akin to our own. We are in a land of dreams, a region of nightmares, terrified, choked, hesympathies, and instincts akin to our own. We are in a land of dreams, a region of nightmares, terrified, choked, bewildered; we shudder as we read, and feelings of dislike, almost, indeed, of loathing, destroy the pleasures of the hour. We own, however, that the author is a master of his art; he we own, nowever, that the author is a master of his air, he is facile princeps in the school of supernatural realisticism, and those who worship at his altar will doubtless be many. He writes to the fashion of the hour, and will, without fail, reap the reward of his fidelity to the many-headed public.

DOWN WITH ENGLAND.+

Silly as are these French brochures which demonstrate to a Silly as are these French brochures which demonstrate to a nicety how easy it is to annihilate perfidious Albion and sweep her from the Map of Europe, this pamphlet is, perhaps, more than usually silly, as there is not allowed to poor England one solitary crumb of comfort. Her fleet is annihilated, her generals are incompetent, her rulers are void of wisdom, her masses are disloyal, her classes are bereft of sense, her armies are rotten, her everything is mere "paper." Yet, withal, we gladly welcome its appearance, because it brings home to us the aims and objects of our foes, and points withal, we gladly welcome its appearance, because it brings home to us the aims and objects of our foes, and points out the "sore points" in regard to which they will concentrate all their energies. What are these? First and foremost we learn that the pretty talk about the bonds of civilisation between the two countries is idle nonsense. France never has forgiven and never will forgive Waterloo. Secondly, Egypt is a rankling wound to the fiery swashbucklers across the channel. Out we go, "bag and bagges" wherever the Gallic toe can succeed in ejecting poor John swashbucklers across the channel. Out we go, "bag and bag-gage," wherever the Gallic toe can succeed in ejecting poor John Bull from the land of the Pharaohs. Thirdly, the great strategic ports all over the world are viewed with covetous eyes by our fire-eating neighbours and quondam allies. Fourthly, our Colonial possessions are destined (according to French notions) to enrich our rivals; ergo, it is admitted that they are a source to us of wealth if not of power. Fifthly, the construction of the Channel tunnel is to be one of the conditions of peace, showing clearly that the undertaking in ques-tion is viewed by our foes as a weakness to us and a strength

What says Sir Edward Watkins to this naïve conto them. What says Sir Edward Watkins to this naive con-fession? Sixthly, the downfall of England is to be accom-plished amongst other means by the rebellion of the Irish, led by the demagogues, the dear goodfriends whom the Grand Old Man regards as the purest and noblest of the human race. Yes, these disinterested patriots are to sell their country and aid her foes, and history is to repeat the events of the dawn of the present century. What a comment on Home Rule and the Separatist policy!

We are not in a position to judge how far the brochure under review gives expression to the sentiments of the sober minds amongst the Gallic race, or merely embodies the malignant hate of the "gamins" of the street who revel in shouting "A bas l'Angleterre;" but, be this as it may, the lessons of hate which it teaches should not be lost, and those in high places might well take a hint—fas est ab hoste doceri.

The Century Magazine for May contains a most interesting article on the Exile system whereunder Holy Russia (God help the mark!) has sent during the present century more than half the mark!) has sent during the present century more than half a million of her subjects to torture worse than death. There is also a graphic account of "Sheriffs work on a Ranch," in which the wild life of American out-stations is depicted with power and effect. The "chances of being hit in battle" will afford matter for reflection to all engaged in the profession of arms; while "Foods and Beverages" appeals to "all sorts and conditions of men." Lastly, an article on "Milton," from the pen of the late Matthew Arnold, preserves the charm which attaches to all the writings of that much-lamented poet, critic and man of letters. and man of letters.

The Art Journal for May is one of the best numbers which has appeared for many months. The etching of "Trafalgarsquare" is, of course, excellent; it would not otherwise fill the place of honour. So much is this a matter of course that high art sa sans dire in the expectation of the public. But there are no less than six illustrated articles, each and all of which would stamp this number of the series as first-class; in fact, there is nothing to skim over amongst the whole thirty pages.

NATIVE RACES AND THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC UNITED COMMITTEE.

The first annual meeting of this committee was held on Friday, May 4, in Princes Hall, Piccadilly. The Bishop of Sodor and Man in the chair.

The annual report, which was read by the Rev. J. Grant Mills, hon. sec., showed that the United Committee, formed on March 30, 1887, was the outcome of several independent efforts, at home and abroad, of various individuals and societies in-terested in missionary and temperance work; and that on this committee are representatives of the principal missionary and temperance societies, as well as members of Parliament, philanthropists, &c.

The work of the committee has during the past year been principally one of investigation and of vigilance. As a committee of investigation they have collected much valuable information which they have circulated in the hope of creating a sound public opinion, and of rousing the conscience of the country. As a committee of vigilance, they have watched the action of Governments both at home and abroad, and when practicable, as in the case of Ceylon, Morocco, the islands of the Western Pacific, and the Congo, have made representations with a view to a mitigation of the alleged evils.

Committees in union with the United Committee have been considered and Committee an formed for Scotland, and Oxford and Cambridge, whilst at Zurich last September an International Committee was formed.

The report refers with satisfaction to the recent debates in Parliament on the liquor traffic in India, the islands of the Western Pacific and Africa. Funds are needed to enable the committee to extend their work, and should be sent to the Hon. Sec., 127 Palace-chambers, Westminster, S.W. A paper read by Canon Ellison dwelt on the tokens of divine enread by Canon Ellison dwelt on the tokens of divine encouragement received during the year, and on information recently received tending to throw fresh light upon the subject. This embraced reports from the Indian Governments; action taken by the Cape Government in withdrawing the restrictions on the traffic and the report of a recent visit to Sierra Leone and Lagos by the Rev. W. Allan. It also alluded in sympathetic terms to the great loss sustained by the committee in the death of Mr. Chesser.

Drowning of Admiral Ryder, K.C.B., who was Commander in-Fleet Sir Alfred Phillipps Ryder, K.C.B., who was Commander in-Chief on the China Station from 1874 till 1887, was drowned in the Thames under very melancholy circumstances. It appears that the Admiral, who resided at Wellswood House, Torquay, was on a visit in London to his brothers in Pall-mall, and, as he had been in rather indifferent health, he thought a trip on the river would do him good. On the afternoon of the date named he accompanied his brothers to the Vauxhall Pier, where three tickets for Battersea were purchased. As an up-boat had only that moment left the pier, they had nearly a quarter of an hour to wait, and after a few seconds' conversation the As an up-boat had only that moment left the pier, they had nearly a quarter of an hour to wait, and after a few seconds' conversation the Messrs. Ryder retired to the small waiting-room, leaving the Admiral on the pier. Henry Bowden, a pierman, who was the only other person on the pier at the time of the occurrence, states he heard cries of "A man in the water," and saw that the Admiral had fallen off the back of the pier. He must have stooped to get between the two guard chains, and then he had to walk a distance of 4ft. to get to the back of the pier. He must have stooped to get between the two guard chains, and then he had to walk a distance of 4ft. to get to the edge of the pier; and Bowden thought he must have made a good jump, or else the tide would have carried him against the timber of the pier. Before the hitcher or life-buoy could be used, the unfortunate gentleman had been carried by the tide a distance of about 100 yards. The captain of a steam tug threw a barge oar within reach of the drowning Admiral, who did not grasp it. It is also stated that a young waterman rowed quite close to him and offered him his scull. The body eventually sank, and was recovered some two hours later by the Thames police. The deceased officer was the junior of the six Admirals of the Fleet, and had a long and distinguished service. He was born in 1820, the seventh son of Henry Ryder, sometime Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry, who was third son of Nathaniel Ryder, who was created Baron Harrowby in 1776. He entered the Navy as cadet in 1833, and after 52 years of service he gained the highest rank that can be reached by a naval officer. In 1847 he was employed in North America and the West Indies in command of the Vizen, steam sloop, until May in the following year, when he was promoted for services at the capture of Serapique. During the war with Russia he was in command of the Dauntless in the Baltic and in the Mediterranean, and for his services in the war he received the medal with clasp and the command of the Daintless in the Baltic and in the Mediterranean, and for his services in the war he received the medal with clasp and the Turkish medal, and the Medjidieh of the Fourth Class. He was comptroller-General of Coastguard from 1863 to 1866. He was second in command of the Channel Squadron in 1868, after which date he was appointed as Naval Attaché to the British Embassy in Paris. In 1874 he was, as above stated, appointed Commander-in-Chief on the China Station, which post he filled till 1877, and shortly afterwards was made Commander-in-Chief at Portsmouth, where he remained till 1882. He was made a K.C.B. in 1884, and was a Commissioner for the Royal Patriotic Fund. Admiral Ryder was the author of a work on the saving of life at sea. He married in 1852 Louisa, daughter of the late Henry Dawson, of Launde Abbey, Leicestershire. At the inquest held on the 2nd inst. the jury found that the deceased dropped into the water while suffering from apoplexy. deceased dropped into the water while suffering from apoplexy.

IMMORALITY IN INDIA.

UNDER the above heading there have lately been certain questions asked in Parliament, and certain Press comments thereon, which might lead a stranger to India into the belief that that land of the sun and of the diminishing rupee has peculiar demoralising effects upon European constitutions. That eminent moralist, Lord Byron, certainly stated in verse that "what men call gallantry, and gods adultery, is much more common where the climate's sultry"; but divorce statistics go, it is said, against his lordship's dictum, and tend to prove that the nations of the North, who are described by the noble poet as being cold in blood, and their love scarcely deserving the name, are much greater sinners in a certain direction than Orientalsat all events, they are oftener found out, which, accordng to certain philosophers, is a sin in itself. scribblers in the English Press at home delight in picturing India as a place where the moral law, especially with regard to a particular commandment, does not possess the restraining power which it is supposed to do elsewhere. A London weekly paper, which often touches upon Indian subjects with a profundity of ignorance which entitles it to respect from its intensity, is of opinion that English ladies and gentlemen forget themselves when they get to Simla, and that in the hills the morals of Anglo-Indians are "bad at the best." This is of course a great libel, but it is a libel as old as the hills themselves. It is not, however, with this particular aspect of Indian society that we would deal to-day. Some well meaning, no doubt, but foolish members of Parliament (for all members of Parliament are not wise) have been pressing the Secretary of State for India to give an explanation of certain matters connected with military camps in India, which explanation ought to be altogether uncalled for here. Every military man recognises the wisdom of certain arrangements which help towards the conservation of the health of the soldier, and approves of those arrangements from a practical, not from an Archbishop's, point of view. The British soldier in India is a very expensive material from the first day on which he puts his foot on Indian soil. To have him continually laid up in hospital will hardly help to forming a surplus for the Indian Finance Minister, but this will be the result if a number of goody-goody fanatics be allowed their way. The military authorities in the Quartermaster-General's Department in India, especially, have issued some very wise and practical orders, but the bishops and clergy have taken fright at the very matter-of-fact aspect of these regulations, and so a moral howl has been raised, which has found an echo in St. Stephen's. Neither We hold that this is to be regretted. civilians nor soldiers can be made strictly virtuous by Acts of Parliament, and so long as poor human nature is what it is, so long must rules and regulations be adopted to meet the exigencies of the moment, however moralists may murmur or prelates preach. Sir J. Gorst found considerable difficulty in giving a satisfactory reply to his questioners in the House of Commons regarding the matter about which he was asked, and his position was not strengthened by his assertion that there had not been time to receive an answer from India to a question put in February last. This was not even a shrewd diplomatic reply. It would have been far better to have declined answering the question altogether, as a question involving the discipline and efficiency of the army in India, and one which individual members of the House were utterly incompetent to deal with.

If the good bishops of India, and the painfully worthy professors of philanthropy at home, would only leave certain matters of a delicate nature affecting the British soldier in India, to be dealt with by those who are put in military authority over him, neither morality or commonsense would suffer. At present both are being endangered by "over-fussiness." Let the moralists preach on the mounttain tops to the grass-widow, the subaltern, and the civilian who rush to the hills for pleasurable excitement, but let them leave the health and discipline of the British soldier to those whose chief duty it is to look after them.

THE PIGMY RACES OF MEN.

THE PIGMY RACES OF MEN.

A lecture on the above subject was recently delivered by Professor Flower, C.B., F.R.S., the Director of the Natural History Departments of the British Museum, at the Royal Institution. In the course of his address the professor, dealing with our actual knowledge of the smallest races of men, said:—The Andaman Islands in the Indian Ocean are inhabited by a race of great interest to the anthropologist. The earliest notices of these islands are contained in the accounts of Arab voyages of the ninth century, the ferocious hostility of the inhabitants to all strangers, and their reputed cannibalism being described in glowing colours. It is to this character that they owe their long isolation, although situated close to the track of a great commercial navigation. In 1783 the English Government of Bengal attempted to establish a penal colony on the islands, but it was abandoned a few years later, and the natives were left to themselves until 1857, when the project was revived with greater success and a settlement formed at which upwards of 12,000 convicts from the mainland of India are now maintained. The natives at first were very shy, and it was some years before amicable relations were established with them; but now, owing to the judicious and considerate treatment of successive English governors, they have laid aside their former reserve, not to say hostility, and much information has been collected, exhibiting their moral character and social condition in a much more favourable light than the earlier accounts led us to believe. They do not cultivate the ground and keep any domestic animals, but they have a rude kind of hand-made pottery, and make vessels for holding water out of the hollow stems of bamboos; they also make excellent fishing nets and baskets. They are perfect swimmers and divers, and expert at managing canoes. Their principal weapon is the bow and arrow, but they also use spears, harpoons, &c. They have no metals, and appear not to know how to produce fire, though they alw heads are of the short round type. The great interest of the Andamanese natives is that they are the only remaining pure specimens of a race of small stature, dark colour, and frizzly hair which appear to have been the earliest inhabitants of a large part of Southern Asia, including India, Siam, Cochin China, and all the islands of the Asia, including India, Siam, Cochin China, and all the islands of the Indo-Malayan Archipelago—a race to which the name of Negrito has been given. Traces of these people are still found at various spots over this area, as in the Philippine Islands and the Malay Peninsula, but always occupying the most mountainous and inaccessible regions, and more or less persecuted by the later comers, who have occupied the more fertile portions of their land. In most cases their original characters are changed or nearly lost by a mixture with other races, but just enough remain to indicate their former existence. Passing to the continent of Africa. we find in the southernmost parts the wellout just enough remain to indicate their former existence. Passing to the continent of Africa, we find in the southernmost parts the well-known Bosjesmen, or bushmen, exhibiting a very peculiar modification of the Negro type. Their average height is very much the same as that of the Andamanese, and they have the same very crisply curled short black hair, but in many other respects they are widely different. Separated from them, both geographically and in physical characters, are a peculiar race of very little people called by Hamy Negrillos, who are found living in scattered communities among those of the ordinary full-sized Negroes nearly all across the continent Hamy Negrillos, who are found living in scattered communities among those of the ordinary full-sized Negroes nearly all across the continent of Africa, within a few degrees of either side of the Equator. Our first knowledge of them is due to Andrew Battell, in his interesting and apparently truthful description of the Loango coast, written in the end of the 16th century. His accounts were corroborated by Du Chaillu, Stanley, and others. To this group of people belong the Akkas, who live a short distance to the west of Lake Albert Nyanza, discovered by Schweinfurth in 1870, and more recently investigated by Emina Pacha, from whose letters some extracts were read by the lecturer. These appeared to be really the smallest race known, full-grown men and women being often not more than 4ft, high. Though grown men and women being often not more than 4ft. high. Though grown men and women being often not more than 4ft. high. Though so small in stature they are active and courageous, great hunters of elephants, and use the bow and arrows with the same dexterity as their cousins, the Negritos of Asia. Our information about them is, however, at present very scanty, and a fuller investigation into their characters, habits, customs, traditions, and language would repay the labour spent upon it. This subject the lecturer concluded by recommending to the serious attention of future African explorers.

THE new Government House at Simla is nearly finished, but it will not be ready for occupation for at least a month or two yet, and it is doubtful whether the present Viceroy will reside in it. Messrs. Maple and Co. (of London) have done wonders with the furnishing and decorating of the new Palace.

THE BURMA RUBY MINES.

Sir R. LETHBRIDGE asked the Under-Secretary for India whether the Government of India, in a telegram to the Secretary whether the Government of India, in a telegram to the Secretary of State of June 5, 1887, relating to the lease of the Burma Ruby Mines to Mr. Streeter, stated, "We see no just ground for can celling this arrangement"; and whether the Government of India had subsequently discovered any just ground for cancelling the arrangement referred to, and, if not, whether Her Majesty's Government would sanction the arrangement.

Sir J. Gorst: The words are correctly quoted. If the honmember will lock at page 31 of the papers he will see that the Government of India reported that no binding agreement had been entered into, and at page 32 he will see that the Secretary of State maintained his original position of refusing to sanction any lease of the mines until full information respecting their value and respecting Native rights had been specting their value and respecting Native rights had been Sir R. Letheridge asked whether the House was to understand that Her Majesty's Government would sanction the arrangement if they found on further inquiry that it was a just one?

Sir J. Gorst said he had frequently informed the House that the Secretary of State for India had sent an expert to the Burma Ruby Mines. That expert had visited the mines, and had made, or was on the point of making, a report to the Government of India, and the Secretary of State had every confidence that the Viceroy and the Council would do full justice to the revenues of India, and to the parties concerned, when they had a full and complete report before them.

Mr. Henniker Heaton asked when the correspondence on the subject would be published.

Sir J. Gorst said the correspondence must be kept back for the report of the expert referred to.

CONTAGIOUS DISEASES ACTS IN INDIA.

In answer to Mr. STUART, Sir J. Gorst said: The despatch recently received from the Government of India on the subject of the Contagious Diseases Act is now under the consideration of the Secretary of State in Council. As soon as the consideration is complete the despatch will be laid upon the table with other papers upon the subject.

MAY 2. INDIAN TELEGRAPH SERVICE.

Mr. Conybeare asked the Under-Secretary of State for India what had been the result of the special inducements to retire offered to the officers in the blocked years of the Indian Telegraph service; whether such inducements had had the desired effect, and, if not, what was the cause of failure; whether it was the fact that promotions in the telegraph service were now made only twice a year; whether the effect of this arrangement was to inflict a loss of, perhaps, several months' pay and promotion in the case of those who were moved up into vacancies in the intervals between the biennial promotion days; and whether such a rule was in force in any promotion days; and whether such a rule was in force in any other branch of the public service.

Sir J. Gorst: The first period at which retirement might have taken place was March 21st. No intimation as to the result has yet been received. Permanent promotions are now only made twice a year, but acting promotions are made as vacancies occur. The full pay of the higher rank is not attained until the permanent appointment is made. Meantime an acting allowance is received. No such rule is in force in other departments of the public service.

SIR H. RUMBOLD'S CLAIM ON THE NIZAM.

Mr. M'LAGAN asked the Under-Secretary of State for India whether the claim for eleven lakhs of rupees submitted to the Nizam's Government by Sir Horace Rumbold, British Minister Nizam's Government by Sir Horace Rumbold, British Minister at the Hague, which had been settled by the payment to him of three lakhs, was the same claim as that referred to in the extract from the Hyderabad report for 1294, Fasli (1884-5); and whether that claim was settled with the knowledge and under the advice of the Resident, whose guest Sir Horace Rumbold was last winter, when he went to Hyderabad armed with letters from Lord Lytton and other influential persons, see stated in the Indian papers: if so upon what grounds the as stated in the Indian papers; if so, upon what grounds the Resident advised the admission of a claim which had been rejected a few years before "under the advice of the Government of India."

Sir J. Gorst: I must refer the hon. member to my answer to his question on April 9, when I stated that the Secretary of State had no official information on this subject. Both the Secretary of State and the Viceroy expressly refused to interfere in the matter of this claim.

MAY 4.

INDIA HOME CHARGES.

Mr. Hanbury asked the Secretary of State for War whether eement had been arrived at between the War Office and the India Office as to the basis on which the Indian Government should pay for home effective charges, or whether it was the fact that no definite arrangement on this point existed as to the future, and that even the accounts of the last six years remained open and without any decision having been come to on the subject.

Mr. E. Stanhope said an agreement had not yet been arrived at on the extremely difficult subject of the payments of home charges by India; but an early settlement is anticipated by the Committee under the presidency of Lord Northbrook. The main charge had been agreed upon up to the 31st of March, 1885, but the payment of deferred pay for the three years then ending has still to be adjusted. The special claims now under consideration are those for exceptional years during which large reinforcements were sent to India.

which large reinforcements were sent to India.

Mr. Hanbury gave notice that on the motion to go into Committee on the Indian Budget he would call attention to the extravagant nature of many of the Indian home charges

THE CONTAGIOUS DISEASES ACT IN INDIA.

Questions were addressed to the Under-Secretary for India by Mr. S. WILLIAMSON, Mr. WINTERBOTHAM, and Mr. STUART with reference to the reported issue of a circular memorandum from the office of the Quartermaster-General in India in June, 1886, addressed to general officers commanding divisions and 1886, addressed to general officers commanding divisions and districts, requesting them to requisition cantonment magistrates for the supply of "young and attractive women" to the military camps; and Mr. Williamson asked whether the Under-Secretary had received the information which he promised to obtain on the 24th of February.

Sir J. Gorst said: The Secretary of State has not received, and has not had time to receive, an answer from the Government of India. He has not higher the data transcript to the state.

ment of India. He has nothing to add at present to the statement of India. He has nothing to add at present to the statement on this subject already made several times to the House—viz., that the Secretary of State is causing full inquiry to be made into these allegations, and that he has taken measures that if such practices as those described exist they shall be stopped forthwith—(hear, hear).

Mr.Stansfeldasked when the Government would be able to state their intentions as to carrying out in India the resolution of the House of Commons some Sessions ago against the compulsory examination of women.

Mr. WINTERBOTHAM asked whether it had not been stated in another place that the result of the inquiries was already in the hands of the Government, and, if that were not so, the hon, gentleman would not think it worth while to telegraph to India to know whether so serious an allegation was true or

Sir J. Gorst said that, after the answer he had already given, it would be unbecoming in him to make any further statement in reply to the question without notice.

Mr. STANSFELD said he did not ask for any statement; he only asked when the Government would be prepared to state their intentions on the subject.

Mr. S. WILLIAMSON said it was a long time since the 24th of February, when he first asked a question about the circular. It did not take business people such a time to get information from India. He trusted that before Whitsuntide the Government would be able to get at the bottom of this business.—(hear, hear).

RAILWAY MATERIAL AND HARBOUR DUES IN INDIA.

The Marquis of Hartington asked the First Lord of the Treasury whether the Government had come to any determination which he could communicate to the House with respect to the exemption from the payment of dock and harbour dues, now claimed by the Government of India, on shipments of material intended for the construction, maintenance, or use of railways in India.

Mr. W. H. SMITH: The Secretary of State in Council for India has come to the determination that in future exemption from dock and harbour dues be not claimed on the following classes of goods shipped from Great Britain, or for ships carrying them, on account of the Government of India:—1, coal; 2, all rolling stock for railways; 3, permanent way for railways; 4, all goods manufactured in this country for use on railways, or being of such a nature that they cannot be used except for railway purposes.

Mr. Sinclair asked whether the word "dues" was intended to include rates, and whether "coal" included coke.

Mr. W. H. Smith: I have read from the text of the resolution passed in the India Council, and I have no doubt whatever that coal would include coke, and that dues would include that the coal would include coke, and that dues would include the coal would incl include rates.

MAY 5.

PORT TRUST FOR ADEN.

In answer to Sir R. TEMPLE,
Sir J. Gorst said: The establishment of a port trust for Aden has been for some time under the consideration of the Government of India; but no intimation has yet been received that the question is settled on a port trust in existence. Dredging is going on meanwhile under the orders of the Government of Rombour. Government of Bombay.

MR. TAYLER, LATE COMMISSIONER OF PATNA.

Sir R. Letterde asked, with reference to the allegation that the India Office contained no record of any communications between Mr. Tayler and Sir S. Northcote in 1867, whether the India Office possessed any record of communications in 1869.

Sir J. Gorst: There is no official record of any communication between Sir Stafford Northcote and Mr. Tayler in 1868 other than that printed in Parliamentary paper 308 of 1879; but a letter addressed to Lord Salisbury in 1877, which being but a letter addressed to Lord Salisbury in 1877, which being practically an application for honours was, according to the usual practice of the India Office, dealt with personally by the Secretary of State for India in Council, is still preserved in the India Office. This letter enclosed copies of the correspondence which Mr. Tayler alleged to have taken place between himself and Sir S. Northcote in 1867-68. There is no record of Sir S. Northcote's alleged assurance other than a statement of Mr. Tayler; nor any record of such assurance having been communicated to the Duke of Argyll. There is, however no ground for supposing that the case was not fully having been communicated to the Duke of Argyll. There is, however, no ground for supposing that the case was not fully investigated by the Duke of Argyll. The questions submitted to the Duke of Argyll by Mr. Tayler's memorial of October, 1868, were:—(1) That the order for his removal from the office of Commissioner of Patna in 1857 might be cancelled; (2) that he might be recommended to Her Majesty for honorary distinction; (3) that pecuniary compensation might be awarded him

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

COLONEL CARTER, who has gone on furlough, is succeeded as Controller of Military Accounts, Madras, by Colonel C. F. Thomas, who has just returned from special duty, Burma. Colonel Thomas acts until further orders.

THE despatch, sanctioning the redistribution of Divisional and Brigade Commands in India, is now on its way out from England. Under the reorganisation Quetta will become a division, while the Sirhind division will cease to exist, its staff being made available for Beluchistan.

The 7th Bengal Cavalry, the headquarters of which have just returned to Allahabad, are likely, says the Pioneer, to remember their campaigning in Burma for the next two years at least; though even they have not been so crippled as the Hyderabad Cavalry. Their losses in men was not heavy, compared with those in many infantry regiments—four men were killed, fourteen died from disease, two were wounded, and thirty invalided; but in the matter of horses they have been most unfortunate. At first kumri carried off a number, and then that mysterious and malignant fever, surrah, broke out during the rains with terrible severity. The regiment lost in all 276 horses and 108 ponies; and in addition to this, about eighty horses will have to be cast through the incidental wear and tear of the campaign. The regiment has been supplied with tear of the campaign. The regiment has been supplied with about 150 remounts, to go on with, and they will probably get forty more; but as the Remount Committee has finished its work for the season, the 7th will have to wait a year at least before the full complement of all the Queen's horses for all the Queen's men is made up. And it left India one of the best mounted of the native regiments in Bengal.

Colonel R. M. Skinner, Bengal Staff Corps, retires on an ordinary pension of £456-5 per annum, and an additional pension of £327 per annum, or £783-5 in all.

Brigade-Surgeon J. E. T. 'Aitchison, M.D., C.I.E., Secretary to the Surgeon-General Her Majesty's Forces, now on furlough in England, is retiring from the service.

LIEUT.-COLONBL R. T. CHAPMAN, General List, Infantry, has been permitted to retire from the 16th of April on a pension of £500 per annum.

THE following Transport Officers have been ordered to rejoin their regiments:—Captain H. Capel-Cure, 2nd Gloucestershire Regiment; Captain H. St. L. Wood, 2nd East Yorkshire Regiment; Lieut. C. P. Scudamore, 2nd Royal Scots Fusiliers; and Lieut. J. L. Stewart, 2nd Royal Dublin Fusiliers.

Brevet-Major Cather, R.E., D.S.O., on the abolition of his appointment as Director of Transport, Upper Burma Field Force, has been ordered to proceed to Madras with the necessary clerks and records for the adjustment of the Burma. War Transport Accounts.

Brigade-Surgeon V. H. S. Chesnave, I.M.S. Examiner, Medical and Fund Accounts, Bengal, has proceeded to England on ninety days' privilege leave.

MAJOR J. LACKERSTEIN, V.C. Rifles, has been appointed to officiate as Commandant of the Presidency Volunteers during the absence of Colonel F. Chatterton, on leave out of India.

MAJOR DORWARD, R.E., on being relieved of his appointment as Commanding Royal Engineers, Upper Burma Field Force, has been directed to proceed to India; and Captain E. W. Dunn, Deputy Assistant Quartermaster-General, Intelligence Branch, has been transferred to the Headquarter Office at Simla in the same capacity.

THE following 'appointments in the Upper Burma Field Force were abolished on April 1:—General Officer and Staff of the 2nd Brigade, Commanding Royal Artillery, Adjutant Royal Artillery, Director of Transport, Brigade and Command Transport Officer, Special Service Officers, Assistant Superintendents of Signalling, Field Engineers. The officers holding these positions have reverted to regimental duty or other substantive appointments.

BOMBAY TROOPS IN BURMA.

The following is an extract from Brigade Orders by Brigadier-General Sir R. C. Low, K.C.B., A.D.C., Commanding 4th Brigade, Upper Burma Field Force:—

Myingyan, March 30, 1888.

The 23rd Bombay Light Infantry being about to leave the Command, the Brigadier-General wishes to put on record the services of the regiment while in Upper Burma.

The regiment arrived in the summer of 1886, and has taken a prominent part in the pacification of the country. During the last year it has formed the garrison of Pokoko, and the various posts attached to that command; and it is largely owing to the ability and judgment of the officer commanding the regiment, Colonel Gatacre, C.B., who has also been in command of the Pokoko District, and to the indefatigable manner in which the officers non-commissioned officers and man of in which the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men of the regiment have devoted themselves to their duty that this part of the country has been reduced to comparative quiet and freedom from dacoits.

The regiment has lost one Native officer and nine men killed in action during the two years. It has only sent forty-eight men invalided to India, this being mainly due to careful recruiting in the past and to care having been taken that only efficient soldiers remained in the ranks.

The conduct and discipline of the men have been excellent, and the turn-out of the men has been remarkable for its neatness: and the men at all times have shown a soldierlike pride in the smartness of their appearance. The Brigadier-General has especially noted this in small outposts and in parties on the line of moreh has especially noted this in small outposts and in parties on the line of march.

Colonel Gatacre, C.B., has commanded the regiment throughout its time in Upper Burma, and the Brigadier-General congratulates him, as also the officers, non-commissioned officers and men, on having established a reputation for the regiment of being one of the smartest Native infantry regiments of the time.

The Brigadier-General wishes all ranks a hearty farewell and a prosperous journey to their Presidency.

THE annual report of the Thuggee and Dacoity Department shows that during the year 1886 there were 367 ascertained cases in India. Fifty-four persons were killed by dacoity, and 192 were wounded, while the amount of plundered property was Rs. 3,16,644.

FLOURISH the Berars. When the crime lists are swelling, the criminal courts becoming choked, and the inadequacy of the police being denounced in other Provinces there took place in the Berars last years a decrease in all classes of offences against person and property, and property only, which in the Punjab, for instance, have become so alarmingly numerous of late years. The finances, too, are in a prosperous condition, showing a surplus of 18 lakhs on a total revenue of 110 lakhs; and there has been a marked increase in the number of schools and there has been a marked increase in the number of schools and scholars and in the average attendance. It is not often, moreover, that we read of municipalities spending 52 per cent. of their revenue on sanitation; and though it is disappointing to find that in the rural parts of the province there is little sign of any tendency towards improvement, the local administration can scarcely be accused of self complacency in regarding these indications of awakening interest in the towns as "cheering." Lastly, trade is steadily developing, the aggregate of imports and exports last year showing an increase in value amounting to 108 lakbs. The one black spot in the year's record is the mortality. The Berars still vie with the Central Provinces in recording the highest death-rate in India. That over a whole province the death-rate should be 36.7 per 1,000 of the population, a higher rate than rules in the most unhealthy cities of Great Britain, is an ugly testimonial to the character of the climate. there has been a marked increase in the number of schools and

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staft of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Bervices. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements".

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marino bureaux of the Frensh, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

MAGAZINE THAT GIVES EXPRESSION . TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are, dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing moximity (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

ing between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magarine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English publicare characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

THE CALCUTTA REVIEW.

(The only Quarterly Review in India.)

ESTABLISHED: 1844.

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it... there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—£tatesman, October 1886.

... The best service which I ever rendered in India or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name —J. W. KAYE, Athenseum Club, June 23

The Colcutta R view has given us valuable articles on the army. Some from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophesy, of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.— Address of the C.-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India,

... The Calcutta Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westminster Review.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, MAY 14, 1888.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 27th April; from Allahabad and Madras to the 25th April; and from Calcutta to the 24th April.

LORD DUFFERIN, it is stated, intends, in the absence of any unforeseen occurrence, to remain in India until December next, and will, if possible, pay his promised visit to Kashmir during the autumn.

A SPECIAL meeting of the Viceroy's Council took place at Simla before the mail left to consider a communication on the subject of the Hyderabad (Deccan) scandal, received from the Secretary of State for India. The Pioneer says that the telegram from India lately published in the Standard is "a deliberate suggestion of untruth," and shows how easily a journal of high character may be misled when without the means of checking the information supplied to it by correspondents in distant countries.

THE Viceroy will hold a levée at Simla on the evening of Tuesday, May 22nd.

THE Commander-in-Chief arrived at Simla a day earlier than he was expected. The tour of inspection just completed is the longest ever undertaken by a Commander-in-Chief in India.

SIR AUCKLAND COLVIN installed the Nawab of Rampur on April 18th, and is now at Naini Tal.

It is probable that no Birthday Gazette will be published this year, doubtless owing to the distribution of Jubilee honours.

No date has yet been fixed for the first meeting of the Viceroy's Council, which is likely to be delayed for some

THE Legislative Session at Simla is likely to be a slight one. The amendment of the Sea Customs Act with reference to duty on salt will shortly come under consideration.

REAR-ADMIRAL THE HON. E. R. FREMANTLE has assumed command of the Eastern Squadron in Bombay.

THE MAHARAJA HOLKAR'S Prime Minister has resigned.

It is reported that the Maharaja of Cashmere has appointed a Commission to inquire into several charges against the Dewan Luchman Das. One charge is that the Dewan helped himself to State money from the Treasury.

REINFORCMENTS consisting of about three infantry regiments with ammunition have been despatched from Jammu to co-operate with the troops at Gilgit against the Hunza and Nagar tribes. They proceed via Bandipore to Gilgit, the passes of which are no longer closed by the snow. Cholera is still hanging about in Cashmere.

CHOLERA has broken out badly in Srinagar. About thirty deaths have occurred in the last three days. A serious epidemic is probable. The Jummoo route is closed. Remedial measures are being taken.

THE Sikkim Force have been prevented by heavy snowstorms from making the intended reconnaissance in force to the Jalep-la Pass. SIR LEPEL GRIFFIN will stay a week in Egypt on his way home.

It was reported at Jamrud on the 16th April that the Amir had left Jellalabad for Kabul a day or two previously.

MATERIAL is arriving daily at Manickpore for the Manickpore-Jhansi section of the Indian Midland Railway.

THE officiating Judgeships in the Calcutta High Courtwill be filled by the appointment of Mr. R. F. Rampini, District and Sessions Judge of Bardwan, and Mr. H. W. Gordon, District and Sessions Judge of Sarun.

HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS THE DUKE OF ORLEANS proceeds to Simla to report himself to the Commander in Chief before joining the 4th Battalion 60th Rifles at Chakrata.

LIEUT.-COLONEL FILGATE, Accountant-General in the Public Works Department, who was recently taken ill whilst on official tour between Madras and Bombay, will leave for England in the middle of May, and retire at the end of his furlough. Major Begbie, R.E., now at home, who has already twice officiated in the appointment, will eventully succeed Colonel Filgate, Mr. R. G. Macdonald officfating until Major Begbie arrives—about the end of September next.

September next.

DR. GREGG, now Civil Surgeon of Hughli, will officiate as Protector of Emigrants when Dr. Grant goes on leave. Dr. Gregg's place at Hughli will be taken by Dr. Monteith, who served in Bengal for some years before the formation of the Chief Commissionership of Assam, and has now reverted to the Lower Provinces.

A FATAL boating accident is reported from Poona. Lieut. Falkiner, R.A., and Surgeon-Major Prendergast were drowned there on April 20th, owing to their boat capsizing. H.R.H. the Commander-in-Chief telegraphed his regret from Bombay Army Heanquarters, and was represented at the funeral by General Solly Flood.

THE MAHARAJA OF KAPURTALA has subscribed Rs.1,000 to the Fund for providing Calcutta with a statue of Lord Dufferin and a portrait of Lady Dufferin.

THE TIBETANS showed fight, for the first time since they were driven out of the stockade, at Jeyluk, on April 19th. Colonel Graham made a reconnaisance in force to Kapup, and, coming on an outpost of the enemy there, exchanged shots. The Tibetans shortly afterwards retreated, and Colonel Graham, after carefully examining the whole valley, withdrew to the camp at Gnatong, now strongly entrenched. There were no casualities on our side.

A THUNDERSTORM, accompanied by a gale of exceptional violence, broke over Mandalay. The famous spire above the Throne Room in the Palace was shaken like a reed, and now remains bent.

THE Bannu Railway Survey is almost completed, and the plans and estimates are to be made out this hot weather and submitted for sanction. There are three alternative routes: one via Dera Ismail Khan; one from Khusalgarh at the terminus of the branch line from Rawul Pindi; and the last branching off from Khundean on the Sind-Sagar Railway, running to Mianwali, and crossing the river between that point and Esa Khel or Kala Bagh, thence skirting round the hills to Bannu. The last will probably be the line ultimately adopted, as it is the most direct route from the Hindus to Bannu.

THE Maharajah of Cooch-Behar has made a public avowal of his belief in the principles of the religious faith of his late father-in-law, Babu Keshub Chunder Sen. In reply to an address presented to his Highness by the Apostolic Durbar of the New Dispensation, the Maharajah said that, as a believer of the New Dispensation, he had already built a suitable place of worship at Cooch-Behar, which he hoped to consecrate at an early date.

NOTES.

THE honourable members who have of late been worrying the Secretary of State for India about the existence of a certain Military Memorandum regarding female campfollowers in that country had an "innings" to themselves on Wednesday last, and succeeded in getting an assurance that orders would be issued cancelling the Memorandum, and disapproving of its principle and purport. So far, in their own opinion, and in the opinion of other "nice" scored a success. In the opinion of all who are acquainted with the true bearings of the case the result will be very injurious to the British soldier in the East, whose health will suffer without the cause of virtue or of morality being in the slightest degree benefited.

On this point a military contemporary says that as the object of the Memorandum (which was issued in 1886) was the preservation of the health of troops in camp, its cancelment will be followed by increase of hospital patients and weakened efficiency of regiments. "These," says our contemporary, "are misfortunes bad enough at home, but in India, where the health and efficiency of every European soldier is of the utmost importance in a political, pecuniary, and moral view, the evil wrought by mischievous inter-ference with sanitary regulations is intensified." The subject is not a savoury, but it is an important one; and it is to be regretted that the Secretary of State did not simply tell the troublesome inquirers that he declined to interfere with orders issued by the Commander-in-Chief in India, who is responsible for the well-being and efficiency of his troops. The British soldier ought, no doubt, to be a model of purity and temperance in all things; but, then, he is of human nature, and his chaste friends in Parliament would do well to remember the Horatian aphorism: "Naturam -expellas furca, tamen usque recurret.'

THE expenditure on the Indian Army is, in round numbers, Rs. 19½ millions; or, in other words, the whole of the money realised from land revenue is spent on the army—so the soldier in India is a costly machine to be taken care of, especially the British soldier, whose cost there is said to be about £80 per head, in addition to the annual expense in maintaining him. A contributor to an Anglo-Indian contemporary, writing on military expenditure, describes the situation at present thus:—"The Commander-in-Chief, backed by public opinion, says, "I must have the army efficient for defending the country;" the Finance Minister, with a depreciated rupee and falling opium revenue, says, "I cannot spare more money for the army," and the writer asks, "In these circumstances, can nothing be done to make the money spent on the army go further?"

This is the question which is being asked here, where the relations between the military authorities and the Chancellor of the Exchequer are very similar to those existing between the Commander-in-Chief and the Finance Minister of India. The contributor whom we have quoted gives his own idea as to how the embarrassing situation is to be met. He would entrust the Commander-in-Chief with the control of all military expenditure, giving that officer to understand "that all army improvements which the march of military science render necessary must be met from savings." We fear that the remedy would be worse than the wasting disease it is proposed to cure. Commanders-in-Chief in India, with the exception, perhaps, of Sir William Mansfield, have not been gifted with the genius to make "savings" out of military administration. There is, however, hope for Sir Frederick Roberts to cling to now. There is a panic that we are in immediate danger of an invasion of England, and a seizure of London by a coup de main. It is possible that we may be saved by the promptitude of the Daily Telegraph in sounding the note of alarm, and by the magnificent manner in which Captain Pickwoad (not Pickwick) has summoned the 1st City of London Artillery Volunteers, which he commands, to the defence of our hearths and homes. But the outcome of the agitation will be the voting of more money for the protection of the Empire, and in the scramble for the millions India ought to come in for its share.

A HANDSOME and immediate grant towards Indian military expenditure will enable Sir Frederick Roberts to avoid the invidious task of making "savings" by a process of reduction of salaries or appointments, and such a grant ought to be a certainty if the British nation gets properly worked up into a state of panic such as soldiers, makers of war material, contractors, and special correspondents desire to see and profit by. Macaulay has said that there is nothing so ridiculous as the British public in one of its spasmodic fits of virtue, but there is one aspect more ridiculous, and that is the British public in one of its spasmodic fits of panic.

But, so far as India is concerned, we have been led to understand that nothing is wanted for the security of our Empire there but a little more money. The following, however, which is an extract from a North-Western paper, is not altogether reassuring:—

Our arrangements for meeting the Cossack on the North-West Frontier are now supposed to be complete! On the flash of the telegraph "Krieg Mobil" so many trains a day are to pour up the Sind-Peshin and Bolan railways. At least, so it is believed to have been settled by General Ellis, A.G., Colonel Wallace, director North-West Railway, and the other military and railway experts at the conference in Quetta last month. But when the 23rd Pioneers were sent from Umballa to Quetta for work on the Khojak Railway under Mr. F. O'Callaghan, C.S.I., chief engineer on that line, the regiment was blocked at Sibi for want of a train to take them on. Surely it should not have taxed the resources of the North-Western Railway to send up one regiment to the front without a breakdown.

The writer of the above complaint does not wish to be too hard upon the railway authorities, being of opinion that "the traffic management only requires a really great occasion to show what it can do." A Russian invasion might answer the purpose, but the mere getting of a single regiment to the front is evidently considered as a waste of power.

THE eccentricities of the Income-tax in India are but dimly realised. In the Panjab last year only 38,672 persons paid it, or 0.2 per cent. of a population of ten millions. While 7.4 per cent. of all the persons assessed in the province were Government servants, their contributions amounted to 19.2 per cent. of the total tax. This shows, says a Mofussil paper, either that Government servants are better paid, on the whole, than private persons, or that the latter are skilful at evading the tax, which Government servants, of course, cannot hope to do. The incidence of the tax was Rs. 50 13-0 on each thousand persons of the population. The total amount of the tax levied was nine and a-half lakhs, and the cost of collecting it was Rs. 38,000. The Panjabis seem to kick against the Income-tax energetically and successfully; for nine and a-half per cent. of the total demand was abandoned last year because of objections and appeals. In four of the districts every man who made an objection seems to have gained his point.

Whatever scare there may be here about an immediate invasion of England or India, the English community at Quetta appear to be taking life pleasantly. Here is a week's programme of the doings there lately:—A "delightful" Cinderella, which did not end at twelve o'clock; two other dances; a promenade concert; a bazaar; a ladies' luncheon; two days' racing; two days' polo; two days' cricket; theatricals and a gymkhana. This is not a bad record when it is also taken into account that daily drills and manœuvres have to be kept up, and that the hours of office work are supposed to be from ten till five.

AT Hyderabad the Volunteer Rifles have also been distinguishing themselves by hard work and festive relaxation. They have been inspected by Major-General Gib, C.B., and highly commended by him for their skill in manœuvring in the field. They were then marched, writes a local reporter, to the Club, "where a sumptuous repast was considerately prepared." This was manœuvred equally skilfully; but the reporter adds: "An unfortunate accident marred the merriment—one of the volunters had his hand rather badly cut by the bursting of a soda-water bottle, and a melée, we regret to observe, unhappily brought the day's proceedings to a close. We fear that there was much feasting in honour of Bacchus." Messrs. Slagg, Smith, Caine and Co. ought to see to this. It confirms their view of the connection between the drink question and the defences of India.

A RUMOUR is said to be prevalent in Chandernagore that the French Government is willing to dispose of their possessions in India to the British Government at a reasonable price, as the cost of administering French India is greatly in access of the revenue it yields. We doubt the truth of the rumour, notwithstanding that economy in administration is one of the boasted virtues of the present French Republic. The cost of keeping up the petty territories of Chandernagore and Pondicherry is, no doubt, great, but so is French vanity; and that has to be taken into account in any question of territorial transfer.

Our readers will, we think, thank us for reproducing the able and interesting paper read recently by Sir William Hunter before the Royal Colonial Institution. Pressure on our space prevents us from giving the whole of the paper to-day; but its conclusion will follow in our next, when we shall notice some of the views which the lecturer put forward, and on which there will be, of course, some differences of opinion. We invite correspondence on this ences of opinion. important subject.

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

(By TELEGRAPH.) (Times Correspondents.) INDIA.

CALCUTTA, MAY 13.

The recent insubordination of the students of the Madras Christian College has developed into a political question of considerable magnitude. The popular cry has been raised that the Hindoo religion is endangered by the existing system of English education, while the complaint is made on the other side that the large funds subscribed in England and Scotland for miscionary numbers are used for the number of promotion side that the large funds subscribed in England and Scotland for missionary purposes are used for the purpose of promoting secular education among the Hindoos. Large numbers of impoverished Europeans and Eurasians remain utterly neglected, and a Hindoo tract society has been established, with its headquarters at Madras, for the purpose of propagating Hindooism and attacking Christianity. A large meeting of students of various colleges was held at Madras on Thursday. Those present were addressed by Ragunath Rao, Holkar's late Minister. After laying stress on the value of religious instruction, he urged that a national college should be founded. A paper was circulated inviting subscriptions towards the Hindoo Theological Fund. It referred to the proselytising influence of the missionaries, and asserted that this had resulted in serious consequences. Hence an urgent necessity had arisen for a purely Hindoo college.

In the meantime five students have been expelled from the Christian College, and many have been fined. Large numbers of those who have returned state that their sole object is to obtain their attendance certificates at the present examinations, and that when these are concluded they will leave the college.

tions, and that when these are concluded they will leave the college. The Director of Public Instruction had announced that none of the students expelled from the college will be permitted to enter any Government school or college. The leading Madras newspaper in an editorial note points out that this college has been the foster-mother of hundreds of Brahming with the college has been the foster-mother of hundreds of Brahming. mins, who have graduated, and remained Brahmins. It imparts education to students who have not the slightest intention of ever becoming Christians, and who, as a matter of fact, never do become Christians.

The title of the college is utterly misleading. The theory of its existence is that it constitutes a means to the end of making converts to the creed professed by the members of the Free Church of Scotland. But no converts are made, and as an institution maintained for the object of propagating Christianity the college is an utter failure The same must be said of other large missionary colleges in Madras and other Presidencies.

A telegram from Kurrachee announces the arrival of Ayoob Khan and Hassim Khan, with 23 Sirdars, 60 attendants, and 800 followers. One of Ayoob's daughters died on the night previous to his arrival. He left for Rawul-Pindi by special train yesterday.

A telegram from Delhi announces the conviction of Ganga Sahai, a famous dacoit. He was found hiding in the jungle on the Meerut side of the Jumna, and was captured after a desperate resistance, and has been sentenced to twelve years' rigorous imprisonment.

The Calcutta Municipal Bill was passed in Council yesterday. A certain netwee member protested against the Bill

A telegram from Bombay states that the municipality of Ahmedabad has been suspended for persisting in imposing octroi duties, against the repeated warnings of the Government. The administration had been brought to a deadlock, the employés were unpaid, and no revenue had been realised for the purpose of defraying current charges.

The revenue of the Government of India exceeded by three labby the revised estimates for Moreh last after four labby

A team of Parsee cricketers which has left for Europe has arranged to play thirty matches in England, and will return in six months.

It is reported that the inquiry which is being conducted by the local administrations into the poverty of the masses of India, particularly into the agricultural tracts, is being made as expeditiously as possible. The Government of India has asked that the replies of the local governments shall reach them punctually by June 1, "as the Viceroy, who desires to deal personally with the subject, will leave India earlier than was anticipated." These words are quoted from an official circular circular.

In connection with Lady Dufferin's fund, the following gentlemen have contributed towards the cost of a Zenana hospital:—Gubboy, Rs.10,000; Gunga Persad, Rs.10,000; Shyam Charan Law, Rs.5,000; Ram Narain Singh, Rs.2,000; and Rameshwar Singh, Rs.5,000. A destructive fire has occurred in Poonah. After causing great damage it was extinguished with the aid of the troops.

CALCUTTA, MAY 13.

The Hyderabad mining question is still discussed by the Indian Press, and arouses considerable public interest. Abdul Huk is kept under close surveillance at Hyderabad. He has been in consultation with certain leading members of the Bombay Bar, who have been retained, and who receive very large fees. It is stated that the Hyderabad authorities have been engaged in investigating the subject for the last three months, but that the first intimation received by Abdul Huk was his suspension. During his stay in England Mehdi Ali will represent the Hyderabad Government, not only at the inquiry, but generally, being authorised to adopt the necessary measures to cancel the concession, to affect a compromise with the shareholders, or to arrange for the reconstruction of the company, or to form a new one for the development of the mineral resources of Hyderabad.

Abdul Huk has been a large investor in Bombay, has purchased Watson's Hotel for a large sum, has built a range of palatial chambers near the Yacht Club, and has also purchased the old Secretariat offices, where he purposed building a Brokers' Exchange and a Burlington Arcade.

SIKKIM.

It is reported from Nepaul that the Tibetans intend shortly to attack our troops in Sikkim. Supplies have been ordered for the whole force up to the end of June.

The Lieutenant-Governor will visit Gnatong at an early

CALCUTTA, MAY 13.

Further particulars, though not of a very satisfactory nature have been received of the murder of Mr. Dalgleish. The murderer, whose name is Dad Mohamed Khan, appears to have been marching for some days in company with Mr. Dalgleish. The latter went to the Khan's tent on the evening of April 8 to converse as usual. What passed has not transpired, but Mr. Dalgleish was almost immediately attacked. The murderer first fired a shot at close quarters, which struck Dr. Dalgleish on the right shoulder, and then a second, which inflicted no wound, the bullet being turned by a coat button. The murderer then attacked the wounded man with a sword. The first blow gashed the would with a sword. The life blow gashed the victim's right arm, which was held up for protection; the next apparently fell on the left hand, which was found to have been severely cut. Several wounds were inflicted on the back of the head. Mr. Dalgleish must then have fallen forward on his face, and with another blow his head was almost severed from the body.

The remains lay for two days on the ground. The dead man's servants were forced to go with the murderer's party for two marches onwards. When released they returned to the spot and brought the body into Leh, arriving there on April 27. Though the tents were only 30 yards apart, the servants allege that they heard nothing of the struggle. All the property of Mr. Dalgleish was taken except a pocket-book and some money which were left on his person.

BURMA.

RANGOON, MAY 12.

Mr. Bradlaugh's question in the House of Commons with reference to the rates charged the Government by the Irra-waddy Flotilla Company has caused much surprise here. The Rangoon Gazette publishes an article stating authoritatively that the Government never was charged higher rates for freight than the public, and that in many instances the Government paid a lower rate than the public. It adds:

"So far from the Government having been charged 26 rupees per ton freight to Mandalay, much of the Government goods, including the rails and materials for the Tounghoo-Mandalay including the rails and materials for the Tounghoo-Mandalay Railway, was carried at less than half that rate."

The Chief Commissioner yesterday opened for goods traffic the railway from Tounghoo to Pyinmana. The remaining section of the line to Mandalay will be available before the end of the year. All the Government freight for Mandalay will thenceforward be sent on by rail.

The reinforcements sent from Mandalay against the Chins number about 800 men. When these arrive 3,000 soldiers and military police and two guns will be available for service in the Kubo and Chindwin valleys. There will also be the troops which the Chief Commissioner has requested the General sommanding the Eastern Bengal Division to assemble at Munipore. No difficulty is anticipated in driving back the Chins and punishing them.

The bodies of Lieutenant Elliot, Mr. O'Dowda and the Chins and punishing them.

The bodies of Lieutenant Elliot, Mr. O'Dowda and the privates of the Royal Munster Fusiliers, killed by dacoits on the 5th inst., have been recovered by Captain Knox, of the Hyderabad Cavalry, who searched the jungle for six hours with a strong body of troops. All the bodies were found unmutilated, lying where they had fallen. Near Mr. Elliot were the bodies of two dacoit bohs, who had been shot by him with his revolver. The corpses of Mr. O'Dowda and the private soldiers were found in the centre of the dacoits' camp, which appears to have been held by a strong party when it was attacked.

A very successful engagement with Kachyens is reported near Mogoung. Boh-Ti, a Kachyen Tsawbwa, who had been harassing the Mogoung garrison with 200 followers, occupied a hill four miles from Mogoung. Lieutenant O'Donnell, commandant of the garrison, and Mr. Elliot, Assistant-Commissioner, with 150 of the military police, attacked and completely routed Boh-Ti. Twenty Kachyens were killed, three wounded, and six made prisoners, and the rest fled precipitately.

It is reported that the Local Government has detected a treasonable correspondence between certain Phoongyees in Lower Burma and the Mengwoon Prince of Pondicherry. The Mengwoon is a son of the late King Mindonemin, and during his father's life he headed a formidable revolt against the King. He is the most dangerous Alompra Prince still at large. He

He is the most dangerous Alompra Prince still at large. He is reputed to possess much influence among the Shans. A report has been current among the Burmese that the Mengwoon had landed in Burma. It has been ascertained, however, that he is still at Pondichery.

The 27th Regiment of Punjabees sailed to-day for Calcutta. The expediency of lessening the garrison in the present disturbed state of the province is much questioned.

THE NEW INDUSTRIAL ERA IN INDIA.

A Paper read at the Royal Colonial Institute on May 8 by Sir William Wilson Hunter, K.C.S.I., C.I.E., LL.D.

During the present generation India has appeared in a new character in the markets of the world. The India of antiquity was a dealer in curiosities. The India of the East India Company was a retail trader in luxuries. The India of the Queen is a wholesale producer of staples, doing an enormous export business in the foods which feed and the fibres which clothed in the contraction of the present the contraction of the present the contraction of the present the contraction of the contr business in the foods which feed and the fibres which clothe distant nations. Nor is the change less complete in regard to what India now wishes to buy from other countries than in regard to what she offers for sale. Ancient India insisted on being paid for her curiosities and luxuries in hard cash, silver or gold. Modern India has during more than half a century taken payment for her products chiefly in British goods. She is now entering the market as a competitor with the British workman, alike with the farm labourer of Norfolk and with the Lancashire mill-hand. It is probable that before long she will appear in equally keep competition with the British she will appear in equally keen competition with the British capitalist.

I venture to ask the attention of the Royal Colonial Institute to the position which India is thus taking up. That position is not without its perils. We have, on the one hand, this great and powerful England, hard pressed by the necessity of finding work for its own population, and able to impose its economic theories and its imperial laws on the competing population of India. On the other hand, there is the vast Indian people, a people whom we can wrong if we please, but whose wrongs would assuredly bring shame and punishment to England; a people no longer silent under injury or incapable of union, but trained by ourselves to criticise our acts, and throbbing with the aspirations of that new national life, which we ourselves have called into being. I believe that which we ourselves have called into being. I believe that during the next few years there will come moments of great temptation to England to deal unfairly with India. For the development of India as a manufacturing and food-exporting country will involve changes in English production, which, all though bringing their compensations in the and must fore time though bringing their compensations in the end, must for a time be attended by suffering and loss. We should not forget that in the last century, when Indian cottons competed with English fabrics in England, prohibitive restrictions were laid upon the import of Indian cottons into Great Britain. In the the import of Indian cottons into Great Britain. In the present century, when English piece goods are being threatened by the Indian mills, the Indian customs tariff has been more than once dealt with in the interests not of the Indian revenue, but of the English manufacturer. Some of our most injurious mistakes towards India have, indeed, been mistakes of ignorance rather than of injustice. I believe that a fuller knowledge of the facts will create a more steadfast resolve to de right that the metional conscious will become more knowledge of the facts will create a more steadfast resolve to do right, that the national conscience will become more sensitive as the national intelligence becomes more clearly informed. And I know of no body of Englishmen capable of rendering truer help to England in the great issues that may arise, than this Royal Colonial Institute, representing, as it does, the common interests instead of the dividing rivalries of the British dependencies throughout the world, and labouring as it labours to unite them all on the foundation of instice to as it labours to unite them all, on the foundation of justice to each.

The permanent factors which have regulated India's trade with Europe are the cost of carriage, and the comparative cheapness of production in India. I place the cost of carriage first, although in logical sequence it should come second. For the cost of carriage long exercised so paramount an influence as to overbalance the comparative cheapness of production, except in regard to a few costly and portable articles. A third factor in the Indo-European trade, although by no means so constant, has been the comparative value of silver in the East and the West. I propose to examine the practical effect of these three influences on the revolution which has lately taken place in Indian commerce, without claiming completeness for the division. I do not ignore, for example, the effect of India's annual payment to England, although it is not needful for my present purpose to dwell upon it.

The carrying trade with India has had four eras. The first epoch was the caravan age, when the transports of Indian commodities were conducted by the journey across inner Asia to the Levant. It is obvious that only articles which would bear a very large increase to their cost of production could reach Europe by this means. For whichever of the three principal land routes were taken, the cost of carriages was so high, and the risks of plunder and attack were so serious, that before an Indian article could reach the Mediterranean it represented not only many intermediate pro-Mediterranean it represented not only many intermediate pro fits, but the lives of the beasts of burden who perished by the way, and often a man's ransom. The caravan age was the age of Indian gems and drugs. The second era of the Indian carrying trade marks the early timorous attempts of man to master the terrors of the ocean. It combined land-transport with a sea voyage. The Persian Gulf and afterwards the Red Sea were used to shorten the land route, and eventually superseded it. During this period, which extends from the Book of the Chronicles to the expedition of Vasco da Gama, the articles brought from India grew in bulk and multiplied in variety. In addition to gems and drugs, the finer classes of Indian fabrics and metal-work began to reach Europe. For examination of the commedities brought by the greyon an examination of the commodities brought by the caravan route, and via the Persian Gulf and Red Sea, I beg to refer to Sir George Birdwood's excellent, although scattered writings in the past, and to the great work on Indian Commerce, in which he is now embodying his long and useful labours. Like all students who have devoted some care to the subject, I look forward to the publication of that work as to a new landmark in the work of the subject of the in our knowledge regarding India.

The third era in Indo-European commerce was the period of the Cape route. This period comprises the history of the modern European nations in the East—the picturesque progress of the Portuguese, the methodical monopoly of the Dutch, the gallant but ill-supported efforts of the French, the slow hesitations and final supremacy of England. The comparative cheapness of the Cape route opened out the hand-manufactures of India to Europe.

The introduction of railways into India, the extended use of steam-shipping, and the cutting of the Suez Canal, inaugurated the fourth and present era of Indian staples. For the first time in history, India has been enabled to appear to Europe in her true commercial character, not as a dealer in curiosities and trinkets, nor as a maker of art fabrics for the rich, but as a producer of raw materials on an enormous scale. Her old trade in precious hand-made articles has given place to a vast exportation in fibres and food-stuffs; and a new commerce in manufactures by steam machinery is springing up. The essential competition between India and Europe is now the competition competition between india and Europe is now the competition between the productive powers of the tropics and of the temperate zone. We shall see hereafter that the advantages are not all on the side of the sun. What at present we have to deal with is the fact that this competition in heavy and bulky staples has been rendered possible by the new era in the Indian carrying trade, represented by railways, steam navigation, and the Suez Canal.

I have conjoined railways, steam navigation, and the Suez Canal as the three motive powers in the present development of the Indian carrying trade. For it is impossible, without a minute statistical analysis, which would here be out of place, to accurately estimate their functions, taken separately, in the reduction of freights and in expediting the operations of Indian commerce. It is these results, taken together, which are throwing open the agricultural staples of India to Europe. But the joint effect of the three causes may be clearly brought out by a few facts concerning the recent growth of Indian trade. During the first twenty years of the last century the annual imports into England by the East India Company were valued at three-quarters of a million sterling, and consisted of calicoes and other woven goods, silk, diamonds, spices, drugs and saltpetre. The Com-I have conjoined railways, steam navigation, and the Suez million stering, and consisted of cancoes and other woven goods, silk, diamonds, spices, drugs and saltpetre. The Company's exports from England to the East slightly exceeded haf a million sterling a year, of which value more than 80 per cent. were made up of bullion. A century later, when the company's Indian monopoly had been for many years abolished, and the trade of that country was legally as years to the world as it now is the exports from India were open to the world as it now is, the exports from India were valued, in 1834, at 9½ millions sterling. During the next twenty years the exports of Indian merchandise crept up to an average of 20 millions for the five years ending 1854. The following twenty years mark the introduction of railways into India the development of stem shipping so the Canada the India, the development of steam shipping, via the Cape, and the opening of the Suez Canal. In that period Indian exports of merchandise expanded to an average of 57 millions for the five years ending 1874. During the next ten years the influences of the Indian railways, of steam navigation, and of the Suez Canal came into full work. Indian trade advanced by rapid strides, until, in 1884, the exports of merchandise had reached the enormous total of 88 millions sterling. The export of bulky commodities, which had formerly been carried from India in smaller quantities, received an immense expansion, while an enormous trade in a new bulky staple had grown up. Wheat, which, before the development of Indian railways and the Suez Canal, held an insignificant place in the list of Indian exports has become expectated of Indian exports. Indian exports, has become a great staple of Indian com-merce. During the ten years ending 1884, its exports increased from about three-quarters of a million sterling to nearly nine millions

The foregoing summary indicates the joint effect of the three principal influences in the modern carrying trade of India. I am speaking the language of verified statistics when I say that, taken together, they have introduced a new era into Indian commerce; a new era not only in regard to the gross volume of the trade, but also in regard to the bulkier sorts of Indian staples which can now be placed with a profit in the European market. Every improvement in marine engines, every new railway laid down in India, every centime by which the Suez Canal charges can be reduced, means a development of the bulkier Indian exports, and brings nearer the age of unrestricted competition between the agriculture of the tropics and of the temperate zone.

Taking the temperate zone.

The tornal began to really exert its influence, the revolution in Indian shipping may thus be indicated. A large number of vessels then carried about one-half of the present tonnage. The tonnage represented by the larger number of vessels at the beginning of the temperate was only 4½ million tons, against 7 million tons at the end of the decade. The increase in the average size of the vessels has been shared both by sailing and steam ships. Of sailing been shared both by sailing and steam ships. Of sailing vessels entered and cleared at Indian ports in the foreign trade there were about two thousand lewer at the close of trade there were about two thousand lewer at the close of the decade, yet their gross tonnage was exactly the same as at the beginning, or just under three million tons.* On the other hand, the number of steam vessels (entered and cleared) had nearly doubled, from 1,627 to 3,094, and their tonnage had more than doubled, from over 1½ million to over 4 million tons. As regards the shipping which does the foreign trade of India, the three salient facts are—(1) a considerable decrease in the number of the vessels; (2) an enormous increase in their size and carrying capacity: (2) an enormous increase in their size and carrying capacity; (3) a vast expansion in the amount of business done by steam vessels, while there is still enough business of another class to enable the sailing ships to hold their own. As regards the route taken by this increased volume of trade, the number of vessels entered or cleared at Indian ports vià the Suez Canal more than doubled between 1874 and 1884, while the tonnage thus carried multiplied by more than threefold. In 1884, 65 per cent. of the total commerce of India passed through the Suez Canal, leaving only 35 per cent. to go by all other routes put together. The increase in the volume of Indian trade has, therefore, been carried by steam vessels, and through the Suez Canal.

That increase, however, could not have taken place but for another influence which is every year asserting itself more strongly. The Indian railways alone have rendered it possible for the new Indian staples to reach the sea. I do not undervalue the work done by the rivers. But most of the great navigable channels of India (except in the deltas) have developed, along the chief part of their courses, a population so dense as to leave a comparatively surplus of food-stuffs available for export. The capabilities of the rivers as goods-corrier had carriers had, moreover, received their expansion many years ago. Indeed, it seems doubtful whether the general rise in wages which has taken place in India has not told against the slow river traffic in the new industrial era. The navigable rivers, however, tap only a small proportion of the Indian pro-Throughout enormous tracts there was practically no outlet for the produce of the soil; and a too fruitful season made grain a drug in the local market, unsaleable at a remunerative price. In such seasons Indian administrators were long familiar with the difficulty of collecting the revenue in isolated districts, owing to the peasant being unable to obtain money from his pro-A too abundant harvest was almost as much feared as a failure of the crops. The cost of transit by road was, in the case of long distances, prohibitive of export. If anyone wishes to understand the revolution which is being effected in such districts and provinces, I would ask him to read the evidence given before the Parliamentary Committee on Indian railways in 1884. It is easy to exhibit the expansion of the Indian railway system by statistics of mileage—to say, for example, that during the last year (1886-7) for which the returns have been made up, over 1,000 additional miles were opened, and over 13,000 miles were at work, while 3,000 more miles were sanctioned and under construction. But these figures give a faint indication of the economic changes which are being produced, of the new prosperity which is being created for India, and of the production the new food-producing areas which are being opened up to the

Whether the sea carriage of Indian staples can be further reduced is a question which lies beyond my knowledge. But that the equally important element of its land carriage will be cheapened is a certainty. The whole plan of Indian railway that the equally important element of its land carriage will be cheapened is a certainty. The whole plan of Indian railway finance and construction has, during the past fifteen years, undergone radical change. Instead of the old guaranteed system of five per cent, the system of State lines and of "assisted" lines, with a temporary guarantee of not much over three per cent., has been introduced, while the Native Princes have awakened to the duty of opening up their own territories. Instead of the Indian railways depending chiefly on wood, or on fuel brought from England one great coal field after on fuel brought from England, one great coal field after another has been discovered, and is now being worked in India itself. In 1885 the quantity of Indian coal used on the Indian raniways was more than double the quantity of the imported English coal. Indeed, it was almost equal to the whole amount of the English coal and the wood-fuel put together. A new fuel supply seems also to be developing in India. The experiments made last year with petroleum on the Sakkar line showed the average cost of working per 100 miles at Rs.36 with the local petroleum, as against about Rs.55 with coal. The expansion of the Indian railway system, and the greater economy in the construction and the working of Indian railways, have still to produce their complete results in cheapening the carriage of Indian staples to Europe. No words could be so significant as the list of reductions in good-rates, which the Director-General of Railways in India gives in his last report. If the other elements in the circulation remain equal, it is certain that within a few years the wheat and food-stuffs, and general field produce of India, will be laid down in the English market in largely in--creased quantities and at a considerable lower cost.

^{*} It should be mentioned that a change in classification to some extent obscures these returns. I have followed the statement given in the Parliamentary report on the Moral and Material Progress of India, 19th number, ordered to be printed, 1885.

The growth of this great export trade in agricultural staples has not been an unmixed blessing to India. That country has benefited on the whole, but certain parts of it and certain classes of its population have suffered severely. When the railway opens up a new food area local prices rise, and the husbandman grows rich; but the artisan and the landless labourer have to pay more for their daily bread. About twolabourer have to pay more for their daily bread. About two-thirds of the people, being agriculturists, benefit by the change, while the struggle for life is made harder for the remaining third. For the landless labourers it is sometimes made very hard indeed; and the landless labourers mow amount to 12 per cent. of the whole population. But wherever the railway comes, wages sooner or later rise. In many cases the rise in wages exceed the increased cost of living; in others, and especially at a distance from the line, a period of suffering has to be endured before this economic adjustment takes place. The new industrial era has also impaired or ruined many of the old cities and ancient marts of India. The Mughal capitals, Agra and Delhi, lay more than a thousand miles from the mouth of the Ganges. Even the capitals of the seaboard provinces were chosen for Even the capitals of the seaboard provinces were chosen for military purposes, with small regard to the commercial capabilities of their situation. One of the earliest results of British rule in India was the growth of new mercantile towns. The introduction of railways effected another great series of displacements in the centres of trade. One set One set of cities after another has been left to stagnation and decay. But here again, compensating influences are asserting themselves. The more complete development of the railway system is given new life to the ancient cities, which were for a time left high and dry; and while the modern seats of trade are multiplying, many of the old ones are reviving. Calcutta was for long the type of a commercial capital created by river carriage; Bombay is a mercantile metropolis developed by railway traffic.

The cost of transit is, however, only one of the factors in the Indo-European trade. The fundamental question is what commodities can India produce more cheaply than other countries? It is apparent to even casual observers that in India nature does a great deal more for agriculture than in England. The sun works harder; the rainfall holds a more certain and a more beneficial relation to the requirements of the crops. The soil although righer throughout large areas. The soil, although richer throughout large areas does not appear to be superior on the whole, but any general statement on this subject passes beyond the bounds of verified knowledge. Broadly speaking, it may be said that nature does much more to help the husbandman in India than it does for the English farmer. The cost of production is less, the cost of living is less, the rates of wages are naturally and parmelly lower. normally lower. An equal amount of human labour produces, with the aid of the sun and the rainfall, a larger value of saleable produce. India starts, therefore, with an advantage in any competition in the agricultural staples, which may be rendered possible by the decreased cost of carriage. On the other hand, Indian labour is more languid, and the English agriculturist has two powerful allies hitherto but slightly known in India, science and capital. For the little capital which the Indian husbandman employs he pays a much higher rate. And while the sun does more work in India, it enervates the human worker.

There are, however, two economic elements in the cost of production in favour of the Indian agriculturist, which perproduction in favour of the Indian agriculturist, which perhaps more than compensate him for his less vigorous physique and for his want of science and capital. These are low rents and fixity of tenure. Generalisations are perilous and of little worth, but I think I am within the mark in saying that rents in England are still four or five times higher than in India. Moreover, throughout the greater part of India the husbandman has a hereditary knowledge of his fields. He understands evactly what each plot is earlyle of and what understands exactly what each plot is capable of, and what are the best methods of working it. He is assured that the benefits of every improvement which he makes will be reaped by himself or his children. Putting aside all theories, and abstaining from any conclusion based upon general considerations, the net result is that food staples and seed crops of ndia are produced at a much lower cost than in England

The export of Indian staples was until lately handicapped The export of Indian staples was until lately handicapped not only by the cost of carriage, but by bad fiscal laws. Internal Customs lines impeded internal trade, and the British Government levied export duties at the harbours. The internal Customs lines have now been abolished, and with one exception the export duties on staples have been given up. I shall illustrate the joint results of these fiscal reforms, and of the greater facilities of land and sea carriage, by the property of three greater Indian staples wheat ill eads. recent history of three great Indian staples, wheat, oil-seeds, wheat has always been one of the principal crops in India, and occupies more than half the area devoted to food-grains throught extensive provinces. The whole area under wheat in Great Britain is less than half the area under wheat in the single province of the Punjab. The Indian outturn per acre, although much less than the average in England, is only slightly under the average in France, and can be very largely increased wherever it pays the peasant to adopt a more intensive system of husbandry. Until 1873 the Indian wheat trade labonred under an export duty, and the export in that year was only 13 million cwts. Since the abolition of the duty the export has increased to twenty-one million cwts. The agricultural returns show not only that the wheat acreage has greatly increased, but that it is still capable of a much larger increase. In such questions the statistics for considerable periods must be compared, and it is misleading to draw conclusions from yearly fluctuations

It seems probable that the railways now in progress will open up new areas of export, and that, notwithstanding occasional fluctuations, the shipments of the new staple will increase. The cost of production is so much less in India that the ultimate dimensions of the wheat trade are chiefly a question of possible reductions in the cost of carriage.

Another of the bulky Indian staples has a similar history.

Oilseeds were freed in 1875 from their former export duty. Up to that time their average exportation had been about four million cwt. a year. In 1885 it had grown to eighteen millions. The Indian rice trade presents a different narrative. The export duty is still continued on rice, and the trade, although exhibiting large sudden expansions, has not been able to maintain them. In 1873, the year when wheat, released from its export duty, started on its free course in the world's market, the export of rice was twenty million cwts.; in 1886 it had only increased to twenty-two millions. It is unin 1886 it had only increased to twenty-two millions. It is unsafe to affirm that the comparatively stationary character of the rice trade, as contrasted with the marvellous expansion of the wheat trade, is due to the retention of the export duty. For the new railways play a much more important part in opening up the internal wheat provinces than they do in the rice - producing seaboards. Moreover, in the wheat trade India competes with the goldusing countries of the West, while in her rice trade she competes with the silver-using countries of the East. The significance of this will appear in the next paragraph. But two cance of this will appear in the next paragraph. But two things are certain. First, that the export duty on rice has ceased to be defended except as a regrettable temporary necessity; second, that its abolition will place India in a better position to compete with other rice-producing countries, and will probably lead to a large development of the Indian rice

Once more the Presidencies and the Provinces gathered upon the Central Indian plain to discuss the day's dak. For halfan-hour no sound broke the silence but the ripping of dockets and the fluttering of newspapers. At the end of that time Madras chuckled audibly:—"Joseph objects to be pitted," he said. "Who? What? 'Nother scandal? I beg your pardon, Madras," said Bengal. "No. Bombay, my brethren." Madras plunged into the paper afresh and laughed. "Just as I expected. What a nickel-plated prig it is!"

A CORRESPONDENT sends the Indian Daily News the following:—"Under the orders of the Government of India, Prince Nawab Zaighom-ud-Dowlah, of the Oudh royal family, is going to England for three years. He will stop in London at the Palace, and he will teach the Urdoo or Hindustani languages to Her Majesty the Queen. His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales is very anxious to speak the native language. He has written to the Viceroy, Lord Dufferin, to send a man who can teach Hindustani, but his Excellency was not to send a common person of low caste; therefore, Lord Dufferin, under the advice of Mr. Durand, the Foreign Secretary, considered that it will be much better to send this gentleman, as stated the advice of Mr. Durand, the Foreign Secretary, considered that it will be much better to send this gentleman, as stated above. No doubt, Nawab Zaighom-ud-Dowlah Bahadoor, formerly Registrar of Durbhunga, is a very active man of a very high family, and no one is equal to him in India. He has connection with both families of Oudh and Bengal. He is the son of Sir Ali Nuckie Khan, G.C.S.I., late Prime Minister of Oudh; also he is brother-in-law to his Majesty the late. Now he has applied to Government for a comfortable place where he can live in London, close to Windsor Castle Palace. House-rent and carriage hire will be free for him. He will be paid through the India Office. The Nawab will proceed to England on the 15th May next. Further, I beg to state that the Government of India had been pleased to assign him a political pension of Rs. 1,000 a month for life, while he will stop in London as a royal teacher in the service of the Royal Family; but when he will return home to India after three years, then he can get a half pension of Rs. 700 per mensem; and Sir Rivers Thompson, our late Lieutenantand abilities; he is a gentleman of excellent character.

MADRAS.

GENERAL ROWLANDS, commanding the Mysore Division, is putting the troops in garrison through a series of military operations by night.

THE Spectator learns on good authority that the rumour regarding the Bangalore Division being reduced to a district or brigade is premature. It was so recommended by the Finance Commission, but the military authorities opposed such arrangement, and recommended that the area of the command be extended so as to include the Neilgherries, the south-west coast, and Trichinopoly; but so far nothing definite has been decided upon.

THE Chief Commissioner has directed that the cultivation of wheat, tobacco, and potatoes should be experimentally undertaken in certain parts of Upper Burma. The soil in some parts is specially favourable to the cultivation of wheat; and Upper Burma may as yet turn out a formidable rival to other parts of British India in the production of wheat.

AGRICULTURE in Burma is, says a Rangoon contemporary, naturally divisible into two departments. The methods of cultivation of the soil and growing crops thereon pursued in the hills in and around Burma, are entirely different from, and wholly unknown to, the peasantry living in the plains of the province. The wholesale application of the European modes and implements of agriculture cannot be advocated; modes and implements of agriculture cannot be advocated; but we urge their introduction after effecting such variations and alterations as to adopt them to the localities for which they are intended. An insight into the science and the art of agriculture is indispensable for every cultivator, and should form a part of the course of studies followed in the indigenous schools of this province. In the Irrawaddy, Pegu and Tenasserim divisions, there are extensive tracts that may be classed amongst the most fertile lands in the Empire. The lands in the lower districts of Arracan are noted for their paddy-growing capacities. Minhla, Pagan, Myingyan and Sagain districts are highly productive. Besides, there are soils in the interior and in the hills, extremely suited to the cultivation of varieties of grain, pulse and fruits. If stimulus is accorded in this direction, there is no doubt that land-revenue would be immensely increased, an all-pervading prosperity would follow, and end in bringing about a contentedness of the people, and thus make them loyal, law-abiding, and industrious. industrious.

On the west Gunesh Khind and Paruttee Hill can be seen, in the north a fine view of Kirkee with the Deccan College in the foreground is obtained, with Yerrowda Jail and the Bund Hill in the distance, towards the right. On the east is seen the Council Hall with Ghorpooree Station a little to the left. On the east the whole cantonment is overlooked, St. Mary's Church standing out prominently against the hills which extend away to the horizon, and which, though bare and bleak-looking now, will present a beautiful sight when clothed with emerald verdure during the monsoons and cold season. There will be a very tastefully laid-out garden in front of the house, where has been erected a very neat marble fountain purchased from Muraglia and Co., of Bombay, at a cost of eleven hundred rupees. The pair to this has been purchased by the Gaekwar of Baroda. Rao Bahadoor Rowjee tried hard to induce Government to sell him the large piece of ground at the back of the bungalow, and in front of the Council Hall, but did not succeed in inducing them to part with it. However, even without this addition the place will have a splendid compound. It is estimated that the total cost of the building will be Rs.80.000.

THE LONG WHITE MOUNTAIN.*

Three centuries ago a petty Tartar chieftain, sprung from the people, contrived by his own unaided genius to overthrow the Chinese monarchy, and place the Manchurian dynasty upon the throne of the Celestials. The story is one of the most remarkable in the annals of Asia, and Mr. James has most remarkable in the annals of Asia, and Mr. James has done good service in bringing the matter before the notice of the public; but, apart from this, the work is replete with information in regard to a country and a people but little known. Even the Royal Geographical Society not very long ago—so says the preface—issued a map showing a chain of mountains in Manchuria with peaks from 10,000 to 12,000 feet in height, whereas, as a matter of fact, the loftiest range turns out to have an altitude of no more than 8,000 feet; while the fiction of eternal snow which is said always to envelop the top of the "Long White Mountain" is a myth due to the circumstance that the slopes are composed of whitish rocks, which at a distance might easily be mistaken for frozen vapour.

Mr. James makes apologies for the first chapter of his work

Mr. James makes apologies for the first chapter of his work Mr. James makes apologies for the first chapter of his work touching upon the religiou, language, manners, administration, &c., of the Chinese and Manchurians. To our judgment this is, perhaps, the most valuable portion of the volume. It reveals so much which, if not absolutely new, is, at any rate, comparatively overlooked; and the information anent the "Middle Kingdom" is probably more concise and complete than is available in any other shape. To analyse his statements, or to summarise his facts, would involve more space on our part than is practicable. Nor do we desire to review in detail his rambles in this terra incognita. It will suffice to notice three important points—one, that the national misery and detail his rambles in this terra incognita. It will suffice to notice three important points—one, that the national misery arising from the use of opium is a myth—an opinion which we have frequently expressed in this journal. Another, that the revenue derived from the exportation of the drug from India is "doomed," owing to the competition of the home-grown rival; and a third, that China is turning her attention to European modes of warfare. She has already a first-class assembly where guing of modern style and collider are respected. European modes of warfare. She has already a first-class arsenal, where guns of modern style and calibre are manufactured under European superintendence. She has soldiers drilled by German officers, and if these are not a match for European troops, they are at least an improvement on their precursors of former times. It is a mistake to suppose that China is effete and worn-out; a mistake the force of which it is not improbable will cost Russia a large expenditure of blood and treasure. For, true to the instincts of spoliation and intrigue, she has cast coveting and greedy eyes upon the northern regions of the Celestial Empire, and may perhaps live to rue the day when ambition and crookedness lead her to lay hands upon territory to which she has no right, and which, as in the case of Kuldja, she may have to resign to its proper owners. proper owners.

Mr. James writes unpretentiously, and his freedom from arrogance, his diffidence as to the value of his information, may well plead for public patronage to a book which may be read with pleasure, and studied with profit.

A SEASON IN EGYPT, 1887.+

In the autumn of 1887 Mr. Flinders Petrie, the well-known archæologist, was deputed by the British Association to undertake the work of ethnological casts in Upper Egypt. The result is the extremely valuable work now presented to the public. Assuredly this indefatigable scientist made the best use of his time and his opportunities, as is evidenced by the appearance in the volume under review, of no less than thirty-two plates representing various inscriptions, of which he obobtained casts by a process as ingenious as original, for instead of photographing them—a method which is tedious and at times impossible, Mr. Petrie simply beat paper when wet on to the stone and removed it when thoroughly dry. The impression thus acquired would stand the ordinary dangers and relies of travelling an advantage which could not be claimed pression thus acquired would stand the ordinary dangers and risks of travelling, an advantage which could not be claimed by the "negatives" of the rival method.

Not only has Mr. Petrie thus produced a series of Egyptian hieroglyphics which are likely to be of no ordinary importance to the student and scholar, but he has prefaced them with a series of masterly dissertations tending to clear up some at least of the many difficulties which surround these hidden mysteries of antiquity. It would be idle on our part to pretend to criticise the theories thus propounded. There are, perhaps, not half-a-dozen persons in Great Britain qualified for such a task; but we have every pleasure in drawing attention to a thoughtful and learned attempt to elucidate this most interesting and fascinating of studies—a study wherein the dead speak to the living, albeit an interval of thousands of years has elapsed since the symbols passed into disuse, and the remains of former times became meaningless pictures and incomprehensible tokens of an unknown language. To write more than this would be out of our "ken," less would be unfair to a zealous archæologist, an enthusiastic traveller, and a thoughtful man of science.

A LOMBARD-STREET MYSTERY.*

Mr. Robertsen's novel findicates by its very name the style of narrative of which it is a representation, as typified by the East-end melodrama, with all its concomitants of murder, crime, and villainy. Mysterious strangers play an important part in the plot, while, of course, the "detective" shares the honours of the hour. The situations are sensational in the highest degree, and interest never flags. Some, too, of the characters are well-drawn; the rascals being as black as black can be, and the hero and heroine never fail to meet with the sympathy of the reader amidst the many troubles which, as a matter of necessity in a tale of this nature, invariably attend their footsteps. Then comes the happy termination, when all ends satisfactorily. Harrowing tales of this nature are at times serviceable in relieving the dull monotony of existence; they move and excite, and make the mind more prone to revert to sedater sources of mental amusement. Mr. Robertson possesses a fertile imagination; his characters are skilfully handled, and the plot teems with all that racks the imagination or harrows the feelings; and this we conceive to be the aim and object of the melodramatic school of fiction of which the "Lombard-street Mystery" is a good and readable example.

Colburn's United Service Magazine is like the fabled Phœnix, always rising from its ashes. It now appears in a new garb, and, although in its sixtieth year of age, promises, in the hands of its present publishers, Messrs. W. H. Allen, to live long in vigour of purpose, and keep even stronger hold in the estimation of its many friends in both Services. With it is now incorporated the Army and Navy Magazine, which had, in the hands of the same publishers, gained well-deserved public favour. The cessation of this magazine will be regretted in several quarters, but the amalgamation of the two was no doubt a wise step, and we presume that it is in accordance with the fitness of things that the senior periodical should absorb the younger. The amalgamated number, which makes its first appearance this month, is an excellent one, giving, besides the continuations of the serial papers from the Army and Navy Magazine, several new ones, amongst the most interesting of which at this time Mr. Hooper's account of "Blake's Attack on Santa Cruz" may be cited. We are glad to see that "On Leave," by "Furlough," continues.

The Illustrated Naval and Military Magazine (W. H. Allen) for May is a strong number, and contains several excellent contributions. A life of Suvóroff, by Lieut.-Colonel Spalding, promises well in the two first chapters which are given. The style is clear, vigorous, and incisive, and there is no dull rendering of historic details, the reader's attention and interest being thoroughly engaged throughout. An able paper on the Dover Easter Manœuvres, and one on Rapid Field Sketching, will be found of professional interest, and of more general interest. The commencement of 2 series of lighter pages will be found in the "Rambler Papers"—cleverly and sparkingly written. A biography (with portrait) is given of that gallant and popular officer, Major-General Lyttleton-Annesley. The "Adventures of a War Artist" are well told and illustrated, and the "Haversack," as usual, is well supplied. The magazine continues to be profusely illustrated, and shows careful and intelligent editing.

The Journal of Indian Art for April, photo-lithographed and published by W. Griggs, is a very attractive number, owing to the beautiful illustrations which it contains of the art of "Tir-Kashi" or Wire-inlay as practised by the carpenters of Mainpuri in the North-West Provinces. These illustrations consist of several plates, showing different specimens of this art in varied forms. Mr. F. S. Growse, C.I.E., of the Bengal Civil Service, furnishes an instructive paper explaining the illustrations, which have been exquisitely produced by Mr.

Griggs. There are nineteen of these, and they have been printed with that utmost care and delicacy of finish which marks all Mr. Griggs' work, showing not only conscientious attention to detail, but appreciative artistic skill.

Book for Review.—"An Analysis of Wit and Humour," by F. P. Fleet. (W. H. Allen and Co.)

SIKKIM.

A correspondent at Peking writes us as follows:—The movements of our troops in Sikkim have caused considerable alarm at Lhassa, Chêng Tu and Peking. The Chinese Government has decided on recalling Wên Shuo at once, and appointing Chang Kêng, the Deputy Resident, or Deputy Governor of Illi, in his stead. Chang Kêng is given the rank of Fu Tu Tung, Lieutenant-General of the Banner Forces, and ordered to proceed to his new post with the utmost speed, waiving the usual formality of first coming to Peking for instructions. The Chinese have a saying that it is not sufficient to warn Government officials that the tiger is at the door, but to get them to stir the beast must actually have a hold of their skirts. As there are no telegraphs in Illi, it will be at least a month before Chang Kêng receives his orders, and it will take him probably more than four mouths to reach his destination by the nearest route. Pending Chang Kêng's arrival the Deputy Resident in Thibet is ordered to take charge of the affairs of the Residency, and as the telegraph is now available as far as Chêng Tu, in Ssu Ch'uan, he may possibly receive his orders by the end of March, at the same time that Wên Shuo receives his orders to return to Peking. As the latter functionary will not be in a hurry, he may arrive at Peking in time for the next new year.

Some high Thibetan functionary is said to be on his way from Lhassa to Peking, a fact which is worth while recording, as the Thibetan winters are so severe that few persons venture on long journeys in winter. The Thibetans are probably not altogether satisfied with the Chinese Resident's interference in their Government affairs. Many of the Lamas are great traders, and the large Lamaseries are monopolists of various kinds of merchandise. It is therefore quite probable that the Lamas generally would prefer being allowed to trade freely with India than to be restricted by Chinese interference. The refusal to receive the British Mission to Thibet a year or two ago was probably due to Wên Shuo's antagonism—authorised or unauthorised. The stoppage of that mission, and the defiant attitude assumed by the Rajah of Sikkim, together with the subsequent occupation of a fortified post at Lingtu, has most probably interfered with trade, and consequently with the usual fat revenues of the Lamaseries and Lamas. The Thibetans are a pastoral and frugal people, and their wants are few; nevertheless such things as tea, cotton and woollen cloths, needles and thread, as well as cutlery of all kinds, are indispensable to them. Indian rupees are also the current coin of the country, and if once we blockade our frontiers and prevent all supplies of such articles reaching Thibet, or Sikkim and Nepaul, the Thibetans and their neighbours on the frontier will be the greatest losers, and will most probably be very glad to have us trade directly with Thibet—even at the cost of offending China. The Nepaulese and Sikkimese derive a considerable profit from our trade in various ways, and as they are very poor countries, they would feel the effects of a blockade.

The Thermal Establishment at Vichy is one of the largest in Europe, having 350 baths, including every variety of douche, vapour, carbonic acid gas, and other baths, and the service is so efficiently organised that 4,000 ratients can be accommodated with baths daily. The growing popularity of the establishment is shown by the following figures:—Number of visitors in 1835, 843; 1845, 4,120; 1855, 8,882; 1865, 19,092; 1875, 28,777; 1885, 46,538; 1886, 48,325; while last season the visitors exceeded 50,000. It is not everyone, however, who can afford the time or money to undergo the "cure" on the spot. It is, therefore, satisfactory to find that the company now holding the concession for the utilisation of the mineral springs from the French Government have made arrangements with all the principal chemists for the supply of the water and salts in every civilised country in the world. The "Celestins" water enjoys a high reputation as a curative agent in gout, rheumatism, diabetes, and Bright's disease. The "Grande Grille" is chiefly used in diseases of the liver and by persons of a bilious temperament. The "Hôpital" water is very efficacious in derangements of the stomach, weak digestion, &c.; while "Hauterive," being strongly impregnated with free carbonic acid gas, is a most refreshing and pleasant table water, whether taken in its natural state or mixed with a moderate proportion of an alcoholic fluid. Since the present company has held the concession, the annual export sales have increased from half a million bottles annually to upwards of six millions. In addition to the water in bottles, the company exports Vichy salt pastilles and also powdered Vichy salts for baths.

THE Standard is able to say that the difficulties which have made themselves felt at some of the recent meetings of the Sugar Bounties Conference have been removed, and it is expected that the Convention will be signed in the course of a few days.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, MAY 14, 1888.

THE EMPIRE IN DANGER!

THE Daily Telegraph is nothing if not sensational, but few of its readers could have anticipated the sensational article which appeared in its columns on Friday morning, with a heading of capitals three lines deep, announcing that the Empire was in imminent danger, that we had no guns, no proper fleet, no proper fighting force, no reserves, no coast defences—in fact, that old England was altogether in a parlous state, and was going—if not really gone—to the dogs.

We hope that matters are not altogether so bad. is a story extant of that eminent divine Mr. Spurgeon, senior, that on a certain Sunday in summer he astonished his congregation by commencing his sermon with the remark, "It is d-d hot." After allowing his audience sufficient time to be utterly confounded by his sensational phraseology, he is reported to have proceeded, "Such, my dear friends, was the blasphemous remark which, as I entered this building, I heard a gentleman in a red tie utter to his neighbour. My friends, the weather is hot; there can be no denying that, but, thank God, it is not -d hot, otherwise we should all be in hell." The story may be apocryphal, like many others, but it is not a bad one, and it seems to have a peculiarly apposite application now to our own journalistic friend the D. T., who donned "the red tie" on Friday morning, and startled us all by his sensational remarks. We knew before that our army was not perfect, and that there was room for improvement in our navy; and, with regard to that cheap defender of our hearths and homes, the British Volunteer, we had lately heard Mr. Brandon Thomas sing that but we were not prepared to learn that we were in so pitiful a plight of helplessness against any foe until we were instructed to that effect by the Daily Telegraph. But, as we have said before, we hope that matters are not altogether so bad as depicted. It is not, however, the province of this journal to comment on military or naval matters at home—it would be an impertinent intrusion upon the premises of others were we to attempt to do sobut we have a right to be a little concerned as to the effect which this sensational scare will have in India, which of course knows of it now through the telegraph wire. Baron Reuter in his contracts with the Indian Press is generally economical of his news; he does not "spread it out," nor does he condescend to explain the ambiguous. It may, therefore, almost be taken for granted that he has wired to India a sensational telegram of "compressed lightning" or "bottled thunder"—to borrow similes from trans-Atlantic journalism. How will the news be received in India that England is in immediate danger of invasion-London in terror of being sacked—and panic everywhere prevalent? Will the information be received with terror, with incredulity, or with laughter? We know how it has been received by our lively neighbours across the Channel. The D.T. furnishes this information itself this morning:

The France, under the heading of "England in Danger," says:—"We have already alluded to the project of the English Government relative to the defence in London. We learn, with not less surprise, that an important debate has taken place about the English army in the House of Lords. The point of departure in the discussion is an article of the Daily Telegraph, produced in the House by Lord Hardinge, and entitled 'England in Danger.' . . . The alarm in England does not seem to us to be justified, except in case she herself contemplated a new attempt against international law. Unless this be kept in view it is difficult to explain the necessity which Lord George Hamilton felt incumbent on him to declare in the Chamber of Commons that the forces of Russia in the waters of the Pacific were inferior to those of England. Why this preoccupation? Who, then, threatens the British Empire?" The writer finally concludes with the opinion that the preoccupation of England arises from the fact that she intends to undertake in an active manner the direction of European diplomacy against Russia.

It is amusing to find England credited in France with aggressive intentions herself. In India the idea will possibly be that some intended move by Russia against England or India has been discovered, and that the nation is in a state of alarm. Panic quickly spreads, and nowhere quicker than in the East, so it need occasion little surprise if there come immediately from India a cry that the Empire there is indefensible unless some more millions be at once found for pushing on strategic railways, strengthening frontier defences, and completing preparations for meeting immediate invasion. "Behold how great a matter a little fire kindleth!" A Reuter's telegram with the mere three lines heading of the Daily Telegraph's sensational article on Friday may sound a note of alarm from Cape Comorin to the Himalayas. But let us hope that Reuter has also telegraphed the gist of Colonel Hope's Brigade Order to the 1st City of London Artillery Volunteers stop all panic, although it may give rise to inextinguishable laughter.

THE AMEER'S MENAGERIE.—With regard to the recent purchase of wild animals in Calcutta, for transmission to Cabul, the Pindi paper says:—"A small Noah's Ark, in the shape of a train of six or seven trucks filled with animals from the menagerie of the late King of Oudh, passed through Pindi recently. These are said to be a present from the Government of India to our ally the Ameer of Afghanistan. There were all sorts of specimens from baboons to crocodiles, &c. What struck us as most significant was the presence of a fine specimen of a Russian bear."

Whilst the more enlightened Hindoos of Bengal are trying to do away with early marriages among their communities, a correspondent of position tells a Calcutta paper that some heads of the Kayesth caste, residing at a village not far from the metropolis, have promulgated a law amongst their own class to the effect that marriages should be contracted by the daughters of the community at the age of eight years, and non observance of the rule by the parents shall be punished with excommunication.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.--MAY 8.

THE CEYLON RAILWAY.

In answer to CAPTAIN M'CALMONT, Mr. STUART-WORTLEY, in the absence of Baron H. de Worms, said: The Secretary of State has sanctioned an extension of the existing Ceylon Railway from its present terminus at Nannaya to Haputale, a distance of 25½ miles. It has been decided, on the strong recommendation of the Governor and the consulting engineer, not to introduce a break of gauge on this the last section of a line 158 miles long. break of gauge on this the last section of a line 158 miles long. The estimated cost of the extension, if executed by contract, is £17,500 per mile, but the consulting engineer anticipates that this will be reduced to £17,100 per mile if the work is executed departmentally. The conditions in this instance are specially favourable to the departmental system, the adoption of which has been forcibly advocated by the Governor on the grounds of economy and expedition. In these circumstances, there is no intention of inviting tenders for broad and narrow gauge lines

May 9,

CAMP FOLLOWERS IN INDIA.

Mr. M'LAREN asked the Under-Secretary of State for India whether among the papers he had received from India regarding the Contagious Diseases Acts there was a circular memorandum, dated June 17, 1886, from Major-General E. F. Chapman, Quartermaster-General in India, to the general officers commanding divisions and districts; and as to the details of the circular.

Mr. J. STUART also asked a question on the same subject. Sir J. FERGUSSON: Perhaps the hon. members will allow me to answer their questions as my hon. friend is not able to be in his place to-night. The Under-Secretary for India has already several times stated to the House that no such document has been received at the India Office, and that the Secretary of State has no information on the other allegations contained in the question. He has already made the inquiry suggested by the hope manufactor for the House Division of suggested by the hon. member for the Hoxton Division of Shoreditch, but has not yet received a reply. The questions imply a practice or system of providing women for the several regiments in India. To any such practice, if it exists, the Secretary of State is as entirely opposed as the hon members who have asked such questions. It is, in his opinion, wholly indefensible, and the orders which he has sent out to the Government of India will effectually put an end to it if it

Mr. STUART asked whether the hon. gentlemen meant that the ¡Under-Secretary had already telegraphed to India to ascertain whether the document was genuine or not. (Hear, hear).

Sir J. FERGUSSON: I must confine my answer to that which has been given to me by the department. I think the answer

If have given covers that question.

Mr. STUART said he desired to ask whether a definite document existed or not, and, if it existed, to ask that it might be laid on the table of the House. (Cheers.) He asked a question. laid on the table of the House. (Cheers.) He asked a question yesterday on the same subject, and he received a private message from the Under Secretary that if he would put the question again he would definitely state whether he would telegraph or lot (Hear, hear)

Sir J. Fergusson: Will the hon. member be good enough to give notice of that question?

Mr. Stuart wished to point out that that would put him off until Thursday. A discussion was to take place on Tuesday next on the subject, and it was most important to know, for the purposes of that discussion, whether the document was day next on the subject, and it was most important to know, for the purposes of that discussion, whether the document was genuine or not. (Cheers and "Order.") He begged to say that he had received the assurance he had mentioned from the Under-Secretary, and he asked for a further assurance from him that a telegraphic despatch would be at once sent to ascertain the genuineness of the document. He would put the question again on Thursday. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. Stansfeld asked the Under-Secretary of State for India how soon he would be able to state to the House the steps which Her Majesty's Government were prepared to take to carry out in India the resolution of that House disapproving to carry out in India the resolution of that House disapproving the compulsory examination of women.

SIR J. FERGUSSON: The despatch which contained the full report on this subject, for which the Secretary of State had asked, arrived from India a fortnight ago. The despatch is now before the Secretary of State in Council, and its consideration is proceeding with the utmost expedition consistent with due deliberation on so important a subject. The Under-Secretary of State for India has every reason to believe that he will be able to make the statement asked for on Monday next.

Subsequently,

Mr. CHILDERS asked the First Lord of the Treasury whether, considering the promise made to the hon member for Shore-ditch yesterday with regard to the sending of a message to India, he would himself undertake that that message should

India, he would himself undertake that that message should be sent to India. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. W. H. Smith said that he had been under the impression that the answer given to the hon. member implied that the message had been sent ("Hear, hear and No, no"), but the Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs had not felt himself at liberty to say anything more than was contained in the precise terms of the answer which he had read. For his own part, he would undertake that that message should be despatched, if that had not been already done.

MAY 11.

CAMP FOLLOWERS IN INDIA.

Mr. J. STUART asked the Under-Secretary of State for India, with respect to a paper to which his attention had been called, which purported to be a copy of a circular memorandum issued from the office of the Quartermaster-General-india relative to the subject of precitivation whether he was India, relating to the subject of prostitution, whether he was now able to state if such a document, or any document sub-stantially of that character, had been issued from that or any other Government office.

Sir J. Gorst: Yes; the Secretary of State is informed by the Government of India that the Quartermaster-General's memorandum of June 17, 1886, is authentic, and that the document is on its way to this country. It will be laid before Parliament when received.

MAY 12.

THE SUEZ CANAL.

Captain Colomb asked the Under-Secretary for the Colonies whether any steps could be taken to insure a record being kept by each colony of the number and tonnage of steam vessels entered and cleared from and to foreign countries via the Suez Canal, so that information might be included in the statistical abstract for the several colonial possessions, similar to that furnished in No. 78, Statistical Abstract, British

Baron H. DE Worms: Her Majesty's Government will consider how far a complete record of the nature desired can be obtained.

Sir R. LETHBRIDGE asked the Under-Secretary of State for India whether Her Majesty's Government, in view of the interest taken in the proceedings of the Hyderabad Deccan Committee and of the serious nature of the charges to be investigated, would take measures to enable parties interested to be heard by counsel before the Committee.

Sir J. Gorst: The question of allowing parties interested to appear by counsel before the Committee is one entirely for the Committee and the House of Commons, with which it would be unbecoming in the Government to interfere.

THE BOMBARDMENT OF MINENGANI.

Mr. BUCHANAN asked the Under-Secretary of State fo Foreign Affairs what steps had been taken by the Government to press on the Government of Portugal the claim for compensation by British Indian subjects at Minengani, on the Zanzibar coast, for their losses due to the bombardent of that place by the Portuguese in February, 1887.

Sir J. Fergusson: For reasons into which I cannot enter no claim has yet been presented, but the case of the British Indian subjects at Minengani forms part of an affair which is under consideration.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

THE ROYAL WARRANT.

We understand that final instructions have now been received by the Government of India from the Secretary of State, for the application of that important part of the Royal Warrant of January, 1887, which relates to appointments carrying the rank of Colonel, and for which henceforward only Lieutenant-Colonels of three years' standing and upwards will be eligible. In addition to the high appointments, such as Secretary and Deputy Secretary to Government, Military Department; Deputy Adjutant-General, Deputy Quartermaster-General, &c., which as a matter of course will be held by Colonels, the following are understood to be included:—Military Secretary to the Viceroy, Military Secretary to the Commander-in-Chief in India, Commissary-General, Assistant Adjutant-General at Head-quarters, Assistant Adjutant-General for Musketry (Bengal), Assistant Quartermaster-General for Musketry (Bengal), Assistant Quartermaster-General (Intelligence Branch), Judge Advocate-General, Director of Military Education, Colonels on Staff commanding Stations, Deputy Director-General, Inspector-General of Artillery, Assistant Adjutant-General (Royal Artillery), and Colonel on the Staff WE understand that final instructions have now been re(Royal Artillery). A fixed number of Lieutenant-Colonels of Engineers will be eligible for promotion to Colonelcies after three years' service when the present list of Colonels is reduced.

The difficulty which would have been found in applying The difficulty which would have been found in applying that part of the Warrant of India which prescribes that the appointments of Assistant Adjutant-General and Assistant Quartermaster-General of a Division should be held only by a Lieutenant-Colonel of three years' service, involving in the case of a Staff Corps officer that he should ordinarily begin his tour of staff service at the mature period of twenty-nine tour of the case of the part of the case of the part of his tour of staff service at the mature period of twenty-nine years' service, is to be got over by changing the designation of the divisional staff to "district staff officers," as was proposed by the Army Commission. Field officers of any standing will therefore continue to be eligible for these posts.

Captain M. E. O. Welch, officiating Deputy Judge Advocate, Rangoon, will carry on the duties of Deputy Judge Advocate for Upper and Lower Burma, at Rangoon, until relieved by Lieutenant-Colonel Chaplin. It is believed that there will only be one officer of the Judge Advocate General's Department for the whole of Burma, as the duties connected with the whole province are not of such a nature as to require the services of two officers for their disposal. It is probable that the officer will be stationed at Mandalay.

Lieutenant J. H. Gwynne, 1st Battalion, Royal Welsh

LIEUTENANT J. H. GWYNNE, 1st Battalion, Royal Welsh Fusiliers, who was wounded by a gun-shot in the left knee in action with dacoits at Mount Shweboo, on the 12th January, 1886, and who received a compensation gratuity of three months' pay of rank for the wound, has been awarded a further compensation of nine months' pay of rank owing to the severity of the wound, and the present impaired condition of the joint.

LIEUTENANT GOODAIR, Squadron Officer, on probation, 9th

Bengal Lancers, has been permitted to resign that appointment, and to revert to the 5th Lancers.

Colonel M. G. Gerard, C.B., Second in Command of the 2nd Regiment, Central India Horse, has been appointed an Assistant Quartermaster-General on the Establishment, and posted to the Sirhind Division, relieving Major Money, Deputy Quartermaster-General, who has been posted to Army Headquarters, and will proceed to Simla.

Orders have been issued for the seconding of efficers now retained on the Staff in Upper Burma in permanent appointments. All such officers will be seconded in their regiments.

THE ARMY JUBILEE FUND.

A memorandum issued from Army Headquarters on April 5 notifies that "the Commander-in-Chief in India is much gutified at the unanimous manner in which the Officers of the Army, and Volunteers in India, have responded to the proposal for presenting Her Majesty with a Jubilee offering." The total subscriptions in India amount to Rs.7,028-0-4, divided thus:-

Bengal, i	neludi	ng Un	ner Bu	rma		Rs. 5,055

Accompanying this memorandum are two letters from General D. Anderson, President of the Committee managing the "Army Public Gift" in England. The first letter is dated November 23, 1887, and is as follows:—"With reference to a letter dated October 21, from your Excellency's Military Secretary, informing me that a sum of Rs. 5,462-9-0 has been forwarded to me as the amount of the Indian subscriptions to date towards the Army Jubilee Fund, I have the honour, behalf of the Committee to express their sincere appreciation.

date towards the Army Jubilee Fund, I have the honour, on behalf of the Committee, to express their sincerc appreciation of your Excellency's action in co-operating so cordially with this scheme, as well as their gratification at the handsome way in which the officers under your command have contributed.

The second letter is dated February 16th, General Anderson writing:—"For some time past I have intended to write and thank you for the interest you kindly took about the Army Offering to Her Majesty, which has led to regiments in India subscribing so unanimously. We have collected about £1,650, and, on the recommendation of Sir Frederick Leighton, the gift is being executed by Mr. Gilbert. The proposal of statuettes was abandoned, and a work of art substituted, of which a model was submitted to, and approved by, the Duke of Cambridge. When completed, I shall send you a photograph of the offering." of the offering."

A HINDU gentleman, who favours the Madras Mail with his name and address, writes as follows:—"To allay the anxiety of the public as well as of our beloved Queen-Empress, I have the pleasure to inform you that after making astrological investigations I have arrived at the conclusion that the present Emperor of Germany will, notwithstanding his critical state of health just now, live for a further period of ten years.'

A PLEA FOR THE MADRAS INFANTRY.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

In discussing the Infantry portion of the Madras Army in view to comparing it with that of the Bengal Presidency, the question of organisation, so important a factor in the Cavalry branch, may be disregarded as being the same in both, with such minor exceptions as accord with local requirements. It has been said that, whereas till lately the Madras sepoy was "dressed as a scarecrow, but is now clothed and in his right mind," from which it would not appear to be generally known that the question of their dress has been under consideration for years, and that the present regulations are merely an extended application, suggestions are merely under a previous regime; so that the recent Committee found in reality patterns on which to work ready to hand. But in any case the efficiency of an Army is hardly dependent on details of uniform. may be admitted at the outset that the Madras Infantry are not all that they either might, should, or could be; that they are burdened with a plethora of Field Officers; and that it appears to be the policy of Government to maintain them in this condition. Abuse of them, as the Cavalry, has been for years and is still the fashion. With regard to the question of the officers of the Native reals the consideration cannot fail years and is still the fashion. With regard to the question of the efficency of the Native ranks, the consideration cannot fail to present itself as to whether the present has always been their normal condition, or whether deterioration has not at some time set in; and if so, what were the causes thereof? In the old days, when our Empire here was in its infancy, struggling first for existence, and subsequently forced by circumstances to expand, to grow, to add conquest to conquest, annexation upon annexation—by whom were the British forces aided, and upon whose co-operation were they in many cases almost dependent? History answers, "the Madras Army." In or about 1800 A.D., when the Bengal Officeas mutinied enmasse, who were drained to replace them? The Madras Army. In the perilous days of 1857, when our rule in India trempled in the balance, who stood firm and "true to their salt," and whose services in the repression of the rebellion were simply invaluable? The Madras Army. Let us see what happened in the Afghan War. Pushed for troops and with recruiting flagging, Government made the old attempt to drain Madras, flagging, Government made the old attempt to drain Madras, and called for volunteers. What was the result? The men saw through this little game, and said, "Not good enough. saw through this little game, and said, "Not good enough:
You ask us to volunteer, to leave our homes and belongings, to serve in a foreign country, in strange regiments, and under officers whom we neither know, nor who know or care for us.
If you want us, send us as a regiment or regiments, under our own officers." And a free kit, a bounty of Rs. 50, and a claim to unconditional discharge after three years, failed to attract more than a few old men, all of whom returned eventually, discontented to a degree. Three depôts for recruiting were established in Madras, solely for the Afghan war. The three between them did not enlist half-a-dozen men. Government's suicidal policy reaped its own reward. In the second stage of the way the Saprass and Minars and Mi the war the Sappers and Miners and one or two regiments did go. The former won golden opinions from everyone, and the latter were allowed a fair chance, comparing favourably with troops with whom they worked. Their health and death-rate was less than many of the Bengal regiments. As a last instance, take the treatment of the Madras Army in the matter of the Soudan. The local authorities nominated the 23rd M.I., and were overruled by the Supreme Government, who struck it out. Now, if you please, when Bengal troops have done the active service, received the thanks of Government, Indian and at Home; been covered with medals, their officers C. B.s., O. brevets, and what not, the Madras troops were then detailed for the active remains and what not, the Madras troops were the detailed. for the garrison chaukidari work, a sort of sweeping up of the Bengal leavings. Is this fair? Or is it not, as the Madras people themselves regard it, an insult both to the British officers of the Madras Army and to the Native ranks they command ?

BROAD ${f ARROW}$

NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE

ESTABLISHED 1933

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is ofter 4b yno other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is sunplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the Fren3h, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, Fronch, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opini in Eng'and regarding Military affairs.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA,"

MAGAZINE THAT GIVES EXPRESSION TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PROPLE OF

INDIA.

INDIA.

There are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian veople.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native vress. The Indian people are naturally dodle and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordicity, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men destrous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

THE CALCUTTA REVIEW.

(The only Quarterly Review in India.)

ESTABLISHED 1844.

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it.... there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—£tatesman. October 1886.

... The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-banded, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name —J. W. KAYE, Athenseum Club, June 28 1872.

The Calcutta R view has given us valuable articles on the army. Scn e from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophesy, of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.— Address of the C.-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

.... The Calcutte Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its wel-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westmineter

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, MAY 22, 1888.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 4th May; from Allahabad and Madras to the 2nd May; and from Calcutta to the 1st May.

Leading members of the Bombay Bar have been engaged by the Nizam's Government and Abdul Huq in connection with the recent Hyderabad mining scandal. Abdul Huq has not yet answered the interrogatories put to him in his order of suspension.

THE Hyderabad correspondent to the Pioneer telegraphs that Mr. Watson has split and has revealed the fact that Abdul Huq got one-quarter of the Mining Concession and sold his own shares to the Nizam's Government, and that if the concession is annulled Mr. Watson and the executors of Mr. Stewart are said to be rich enough to make good the whole of the deficit.

THE opinion in India is that a public service has been rendered in reviving interest in the matter of Mr. Tayler, the Commissioner of Patna during the Mutiny, upon the retirement of Sir Frederick Halliday, and it is generally hoped that sufficient pressure will be brought to bear in Parliament to force the India Office now to reconsider the old decision of 1859.

THE Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal had a narrow escape on April 30th. His Honour was on the Hughli in a steam launch, when a violent storm came up, and the vessel was nearly swamped.

THE Chief Justice of Madras has left for England. Sir Arthur Collins takes one month's leave in addition to the High Court vacation.

MR. HENVEY has arrived at Indore, and taken over charge from Sir Lepel Griffin, who made his last public appearance as Agent to the Governor-General in Central India on April 28th, when he laid the foundation-stone of a Girls' School at Mhow.

GENERAL G. B. WOLSELEY, Commanding the First Bufgade, Upper Burma Force, intends going home on two months' leave by the steamer leaving Bombay on the 15th June.

MR. COTTON will officiate as Secretary to the Bengal Government during Mr. Nolan's absence on short leave, but Mr. Nolan will not take his leave until the 15th July. He will return from Darjeeling to Calcutta with the Lieutenant-Governor early in that month.

Mr. A. C. Tupp, Accountant-General, Bombay, has been granted six months' leave of absence, and Mr. S. Jacob, from Allahabad, officiates. Mr. O. T. Barrow, Deputy Accountant-General in Bombay, due from leave about the middle of May, succeeds Mr. Jacob.

M. Manes, Governor of the Franco-Indian Settlements, has left for Bourbon, where he succeeds the new Governor of Annam. M. Manes' successor, M. Nouet, is expected to arrive about the end of this month.

COLONEL CONWAY GORDON, Director-General of Railways, has returned to India from inspecting the Frontier lines.

Mr. W. C. MACPHERSON, who has been acting for a short time as Under-Secretary in the Home Department, will not rejoin his substantive appointment in the Bengal Secretariat, but will probably be posted to Mozufferpore as Joint Magistrate.

THE Gaekwar of Baroda revisits Europe shortly, owing to continued ill-health. So far as is yet known the only Indian notables intending to proceed to England this year are two Princes from Oudh.

THE Amir was expected to reach Kabul on April 23rd.

A RECENT Rangoon telegram announcing that the last rails on the Tounghoo-Mandalay extension had been laid was slightly premature. The rails are not yet linked, but the engineer-in-chief hoped to have this effected by May 1.

GREAT scarcity is prevalent in the neighbourhood of the Shan road and in the back districts along the plateau. Parents are reported to be selling their children for food.

It is rumoured that Lieutenant Thomas, of the 15th M.I. at Myinmu, has made a capture which may result in important discoveries.

MAJOR ADAMSON, with the troops, marched there direct from Moungmagan, but the dacoits had moved their quarters. Lieutenant Aldworth is reported to be uninjured, but the Burmese Tseekay, who was with him, has been killed.

THE American ship Continental has gone to pieces on Palmyras point.

THE Macgregor Memorial Fund has now reached Rs. 13.000.

Goods of the value of over a lakh have been destroyed by fire in the import warehouse at Calcutta.

THE godowns of the Cossipore Jute Mills have been destroyed by fire.

THE Mahomedans of Madras have voted a farewell address to Lord and Lady Dufferin.

THE Cawnpore Jute Mill was destroyed by fire on the 29th April.

A VIOLENT storm swept over Calcutta on the 29th April, doing considerable damage to property.

CHOLERA is raging with increased virulence in Cashmere.

Kamal Khan, the well-known freebooter of the Peshawur Frontier, is reported to be dead.

THE Maharaja of Cooch-Behar is about to introduce several improvements into his State. As a beginning his Highness opened gasworks in his capital the other day.

THE Duc d'Orleans arrived at Simla on the 24th April. He temporarily joins Sir Frederick Roberts' Staff, proceeding later in the season to the fourth battalion of the 60th Rifles at Chakrata, to which regiment he has been posted.

LIEUTENANT JEPHSON, B.S.C., late Commissariat Officer in charge of the Shan Column, has died of cholera.

AFTER his narrow escape from the consequences of a cobra-bite Dr. Richards is now completely recovered. The effects of the bite have passed away, and he is pronounced to be completely out of danger.

Another instance of the generosity, as princely as well-considered, of the Parsees, is reported. This time the donor is Bai Motlabai Jehangir Wadia, a Parsee lady, who has just presented the Government of Bombay with land to the extent of 20,000 square yards and Rs. 1,50,000 to build an obstetric hospital.

RAGOONATH Row, Dewan of Indore, has left that State for Madras, expressing his inability to effect the desired progress under the present Maharaja.

THE Maharaja Holkar has nominated Sir Kaseerow, his uncle, the Dowager Maharanee and Buxi Khomansing as his councillors, pending other arrangements.

MR. J. C. GILLBANKS, Registrar of the Diocese of Rangoon, died suddenly at Rangoon on April 29.

THE raids of the Kachins on the jade traders in the Mogoung district are said to be causing considerable uneasiness at Bhamo, while at Tavoy the recrudescence of dacoity has been deemed so serious that troops and police have had to be despatched; and Major Adamson, the Deputy Commissioner of Bhamo, who was about to proceed on furlough, has been stopped, and sent down to take charge of the district.

VERY grave charges have, it is said, been formulated against the ex-Dewan of Cashmere, Luchman Das. They chiefly relate to oppression and extortion, but the most serious touch the death in prison of one of the ex-Premier's victims, and the mysterious disappearance of a young Cashmiri beauty.

RAILWAY communication on the broad gauge between Sibi and Quetta by way of the Bolan Pass will probably be ready by September next.

THE conversion of the Nagpur-Chhatisgarh State Railway from metre gauge to broad is being rapidly carried out by the engineers of the Bengal-Nagpur Railway Company. The rails on the standard gauge have now been laid five miles beyond Raipur, thus enabling heavy material trains to work along nearly 200 miles of the line.

EXAGGERATED fears appear to be entertained in Jhelum as to the amount of damage which will be done to the town to make way for the defence works for the railway bridge.

THE last rails on the Upper Burma line were joined at noon on April 29, and there is now a through line to Mandalay.

NOTES.

The papers to hand by the present Overland Mail are filled with leaders, leaderettes, and paragraphs regarding the Hyderabad (Deccan) scandal. The Pioneer, which has taken the lead in the agitation against Abdul Huq and his "friends" or "accomplices," has an article in which attempt is made to distribute "the burden of blame." It would place much upon the shoulders of Mr. Cordery and Colonel Marshall. It pretends that the relationship between these officials and Abdul Huq is not above suspicion. Indeed, so far as the first-named gentleman is concerned, it speaks out with painful bluntness:—"Go to Hyderabad not as an official, but a trusted outsider—not to the mob, but to the men of power and position—and they will tell you with but little pretence of disguise that the bond between the Resident and the Hyderabad official was such a bond as an Englishman breathing an untainted atmosphere, and writing of an Englishman in a place of high trust, scorns to name. Nevertheless there is the belief. Let it take root and grow, and the end is not far off."

WE should be very sorry to believe the insinuation thus made on the strength of a newspaper article, however boldly written and vouched for by editorial responsibility. There was a time, as many old Anglo-Indians may remember, when the Pioneer would have been the first journal in India to have broken a stiff lance with any other daring to cast "the shadow of a shade" upon the name of the man of whose fitness for one of the most onerous political appointments in India it never until lately had a doubt. What change has come over the spirit of its old dream now that it should write "the official coterie babbled of dear old Cordery," and smiled away their sense of his patent incapacity? The Government of India, catching the infection of flabbiness, ignored the state of his health and the bent of his habits, and still left the burden of heavy responsibilities in unequal hands." What, we ask, has wrought this change towards a former friend and "esteemed" contributor?

It seems to have been expected by the writer of the article that such a question would be asked, and so the attack concludes with an explanatory plea of justification. "There are some we know to whom the plainness with which we have spoken of things about which it is permissible to feel strongly may prove an offence. We would simply remind such that the journalist also is human. Nor does he violate the memory of old and pleasant friendships from mere lightness of heart. But the time is near when the claim of the official Englishman to remain the strength and stay of the Empire which he has worked so nobly to create will be perpetually contested. Let us put our house in order."

By all means, but is this the way to do it? The Pioneer in indulging in censure of Mr. Cordery would have its readers believe that the Government of India is entirely free from any responsibility in this "miserable business." The Madras Mail holds a different opinion, and says:—"A heavy responsibility rests with the Government of India, which cannot be evaded by making a scapegoat of Mr. Cordery, or a sacrifice of Colonel Marshall. The reputation of the Foreign Office of the Government of India will probably suffer damage before the last is heard of the Hyderabad scandals; and the plea that frontier responsibilities rendered the Government less vigilant than usual about the course of events in the Deccan will possibly be urged in extenuation of what looks like a perfunctory performance of duty."

"For," says the same journal, "it was incumbent on the Government of India during the five years that he (Mr. Cordery) held office to satisfy itself that he was doing his duty and not compromising his Government in the hottest of hotbeds of intrigue in India. In proportion, therefore, to its success in blackening the official reputation of the Resident will be the Pioneer's undesigned success in proving that the Viceroy is at fault for not keeping better watch and ward over Hyderabad."

THE Statesman, as was to be expected, furnishes what oil it can to add to the flames, and promises further fuel in the shape of further disclosures in order to implicate the Government of India and damage its Foreign Office. It declares, if its contemporaries "will only exercise a little more patience," that it will show that the whole of the Hyderabad (Deccan) scheme was disclosed to the Government of India nearly eighteen months ago, before it was accomplished, and that the Government cannot divest itself of all responsibility. Of course, as the scandal has gone so far, it must be probed to its lowest depth, however individual reputations may suffer; but "the pity of it, Iago! O, Iago, the pity of it!"

Bengal would seem to be jealous of the Madras Presi dency having a monopoly of scandals, and so one of its most eminent astrologers has predicted that during the present year a scandal which is to eclipse any of the Madras ones may be expected in Calcutta, which city is "to be full of excitement over a lady affair." After all, perhaps, a scandal of this kind, if less exciting, will be of less harm to Eng lish character in India than a Hyderabad (Deccan) scandal.

SIR LEPEL GRIFFIN has made another of his brilliant epigrammatic speeches in laying the foundation-stone of a girls' school at Mhow. Of course Sir Lepel is the warm advocate of the ladies in all that can be supposed to make them happier, brighter or more beautiful; but what will "lovely woman" in England say to this champion of their sex for saying to the ladies of India: "The fruit of the tree of knowledge of good and evil is very dear to a woman's heart, and I feel certain that when in that famous story common to so many religions Eve in the Garden of Eden plucked and bit this forbidden fruit, she allowed her husband a very small piece and ate the greater part of the apple herself?"

ANGLO-INDIANS have not failed to make their mark in many of the various fields of literature open to the scholar, the traveller, the novelist, and the scientist, but few have essaved the drama. One, however, who was well-known in India for many years as the able editor of the Calcutta Englishman, Mr. James Furrel, is announced as the author of an entirely original drama-Midnight; or, The Woodcarver of Bruges—which is to be produced at a matinée at the Princess's Theatre on Thursday next. The few who have heard the play read speak in the highest terms of the literary skill and poetic power with which a very curious plot is treated.

THE London and China Express says :- We have heard a good deal lately about the future of the China tea trade, but the statements of Mr. PHILLIPS, Her Britannic Majesty's Consul at Foochow, are fairly startling. He distinctly states that if the Chinese Government does not fully awake to the subject, and take measures to ameliorate its condition, the tea trade of that port will cease to exist in five years. The Government have already found the shoe pinching in the way of decreased revenue, but whether they will act on the advice which the Chambers of Commerce at Shanghai, Foochow, and Canton have given them remains to be seen. It will be a bitter pill to them if—to save the trade—they have to lessen both export duty and Aekin on tea. Yet this appears to be necessary, as well as increased care in growing and manipulation.

He was received by the Commissioner, the chief military authorities, and a large number of Afghan chiefs, a large crowd of Natives being present. He dined at the club in the evening. It has been decided to treat him in every way as an honoured guest. He is described as a pleasant-looking man of middle height, apparently about thirty years old. It is stated that his allowance will be Rs.25,000 monthly. The general opinion is that he should be treated with the courtesy due to his position, but to go beyond this would have the effect of rendering the Ameer suspicious and unfriendly.

A despatch from Chittagong reports a further incursion of Shendees into British territory, near the Sungu river. A force of frontier police has advanced to reinforce the Tairihi guard, and to follow up the raiders. The impunity which has followed on the murder of Lieutenant Stewart has evidently emboldened the enemy. It is stated that they can collect 10 000 armed ways and unless strong measures he adopted all emboldened the enemy. It is stated that they can collect 10,000 armed men, and unless strong measures be adopted all the tea estates in the province may be rendered unsafe.

There has been a large gathering of Natives at Abbottabad to vote a valedictory address to Lord Dufferin.

Further developments in the so-called "mining scandal" are reported from Hyderabad. The Nizam's Government has served notice on Abdul Huq of its repudiation of the purchase of shares made by him last year, demanding repayment of £158,631 paid for 12,500 shares. This includes £18,750, the balance of the call due on 3,750 half-paid shares, drawn by Abdul Huq after his return to India. The repudiation was made on the ground that Abdul Huq had concealed from the Nizam's Government the fact that he was interested in the company, and that the shares actually purchased were his own company, and that the shares actually purchased were his own property.

The Hindoo religious movement in Madras has taken the form of a meeting, presided over by the Native Sheriff, for the purpose of inviting subscriptions for the foundation of a Hindoo National College.

A benevolent society in England lately requested the Government of India to forward to the native Princes copies of a circular asking for contributions. By the Viceroy's order the request was refused, the following explanation being

"The native chiefs of India have lately subscribed largely to various institutions in England, more especially to the Imperial Institute. The charity for which you now ask support appears to be altogether beyond the legitimate sphere of their benevolence. They would be unlikely to take interest in it, while the fact that their names would be associated with the Prince and Princess of Wales, and the additional fact of your request being forwarded by the Government of India, would make them feel that illegitimate influence was being brought make them feel that illegitimate influence was being brought to bear.

"The Governor-General is of opinion that, in presence of the many claims upon them in their country, the Princes of India ought not to be solicited to contribute to English charities with which neither they nor their States have any connection."

The Viceroy, it is thought, has acted wisely in putting his foot down upon a system of forced benevolences which was being largely developed under official influences.

being largely developed under official influences.

A gazetted memorandum on the revised Budget estimates for the financial year shows the following results in "Rx.," or tens of rupees. They are Rx. 3,07,000 better than the estimates if the special defence works be excluded, or Rx.3,97,000 if they be included. Taking the various heads of revenue, we find that the collection of land revenue in March was high, being Rx.152,000, and was realised almost entirely. The Madras and Bombay opium revenue fell Rx.27,000 short, but on the Bombay side 70,000 of the Hundis issued in March were only realised in April. In salt, notwithstanding the higher duty, the realizations in February and March were Rx.50,000 less than in those months of the previous year, this being due, no doubt, to the absorption of old stocks before the higher taxed new ones came into consumption. Stamps and Excise show improvements of Rx.27,000 and Rx.21,000 respectively over the estimate. The Customs returns show a little less, while the provincial rates show an improvement of nearly Rx.57,000 corresponding to the improvement under the land revenue. As a whole these principal revenue headshow improvements of about sponding to the improvement under the land revenue. As a whole these principal revenue heads show improvements of about Rx.2 85,000 over the revised estimates, of which Rx.1,24,000 goest o diminish the deficit for the year, and Rx.1,61,000 swells the provincial balances. In railways the gross receipts are Rx.22,000 better, and the working expenses Rx.38,000 worse. On opium production the expenditure is believed to be Rx.80,000 less than the estimate. A specially large provision was made for payments in March, but not so great as had been anticipated. The Post Offices are Rx.5,000 better, telegraphs are Rx.20,000 worse, and irrigation is Rx.67,000 better. The Imperial, civil. and military works show a saving of Rx.60,000, and army expenditure is Rx.25,000 less. The special defence charges will probably be Rx.90,000 within the limit.

Sir Charles Aitchison has announced his intention of resigning his seat in Council at the conclusion of the Simla season. It is believed that he will be succeeded by Mr. Philip Hutchins, junior member of the Madras Council, who is described as a man of ability, with a record of services sufficiently good to justify his promotion. At present neither Bombay nor Madras is represented on the Executive Council.

A private of the South Wales Borderers lately ran amok in the fort at Delhi while under the influence of drink. He first wounded the provost-corporal with a knife, next attacked a party of Native servants, and finally jumped on the body of a sleeping coolie, who was carried to the hospital in a dying condition. Finally, he was overcome by a guard with fixed bayonets, after having been wounded by a bayonet thrust.

BURMA.

RANGOON, MAY 19.

General Low has his hands full of work in Upper Burma. It is uncertain whether the Chins have retreated to the mountains or still occupy the plains behind India and Gungaw. is now believed that the number of the Chins who raided into British territory was exaggerated in the original reports. The escape of the Kale Tsawbwa saves the Government from the necessity of sending an expedition into the Chin Hills to rescue him, which might have proved a very difficult task. When the Chins, however, discover that they have been deluded by the Tsawbwa, and that he has no intention of aiding them, fresh raids into his territory will certainly be made. It will be necessary to occupy the Kale territory with troops or military police. The Kale Tsawbwa is now at Indin and urgently asks for help. He reports that a strong body of Chins is at Chengaing, with the so-called Gyobin Prince. This pretender was employed recently as a vaccinator and assistant in the Government dispensary in Lower Burma.

The reinforcements despatched by General Low to the Chindwin valley have advanced rapidly. Major Gleig's column, consisting of 100 men of the Cheshire Regiment, 150 of the military police, and two guns has arrived at Kalewa s now believed that the number of the Chins who raided into

The second column, under Captain Noel, of the Rifle Brigade (the Prince Consort's Own), is advancing to Gungaw.

CALCUTTA, MAY 20.

The news from Sikkim continues unsatisfactory. The Tibetan authorities have as yet shown no signs of being actuated by an urgent desire for peace. They are quite shrewd enough fully to appreciate the difficulties of our political position. They are fully assured that no provocation will induce our forces to pass the Sikkim borders, and that they have only to remain passively hostile for a sufficiently long period within the limits of their own frontier to compel our soldiers. within the limits of their own frontier to compel our soldiers to retire from their present position. We cannot for an into retire from their present position. We cannot for an in-definite period maintain a comparatively large military force in a barren, inclement, and mountainous region, far removed from its supplies, as a brutum fulmen. The Tibetans treat the whole display with contemptuous indifference, and decline to be awed in any way, or to enter into negotiations for peace. The visit of the Lieutenant-Governor, and the advent of the new Chinese Commissioner may induce a favourable change in a political position which, were it not for possible grave consequences, could hardly be described as other than a ridi culous impasse

The latest telegraphic despatch states that a reconnoisance was lately made beyond Kuppup towards the Lagyapta-road, but that there were no signs of the enemy. Full supplies for the whole force to the end of June are being collected at Gnatong. It is possible that the British troops may be detained longer. But in the event of the European troops being re moved the Pioneers and the wing of a Native Infantry regiment will remain until the affair has been finally settled. Barracks are being constructed in view of the approach of the rainy season. The last report from Tibet stated that the Chivac Convenience and addition was the Physical Chivac Convenience and additional contracts of the property about Chinese Commissioners were daily expected at Phari, about 100 miles from the Sikkim frontier. The Phadong Lama still resides in our camp. The Tibetans send threatening messages to the effect that so soon as their preparations for war have been completed they will sweep the British force back to Calcutta.

HAILEYBURY AND THE INDIAN CIVIL SERVICE.

(Bombay Gazette.)

We gave some particulars the other day of the few remaining Haileybury Civil Servants, and showed how very rapidly they were now disappearing. Ever since we wrote two out of the fifty then left have retired, viz., Sir C. Bernard and Mr. J. H. Grant (Bombay Civil Service), and two more Mr. H. N. B. Erskine (Bombay Civil Service) and Mr. F. B. Peacock are believed to be on the point of retirement. But the Competition Civilians of the earlier years are disappearing quite as fast as, if not faster, than the Haileybury men. In the firs yeart of competition, 1856, 20 Civilians came out to India, and of these only four still remain in the Service. They are Mr. Reynolds (Board of Revenue, Bengal), Sir C. Aitchison (Member of the Governor-General's Council), Mr Cordyer (Resident of Hyderabad), and Mr. R. West (Member of Council, Bombay). Of the remaining sixteen, ten have retired and six have died. The six who died were Messrs. Wells Butler (59), Heely (76), Warrand (64), Pomeroy (57), Herbert Wilson (66), and Daly (63). The figures after the names indicate the year Heely (76), Warrand (64), Pomeroy (57), Herbert Wilson (66), and Daly (63). The figures after the names indicate the year of death, and it will be seen that, with the exception of Mr. Heely, all died before the end of 1866, or within the first ten years of their service; then none died for ten years till 1876, and since then none have died in the last twelve years. The ten who have retired are Messrs. Cornell (81), Moss King (83), Peile (87), Thornton (81), Bell (77), Perkins (86), Sandford (84), Brittain Jones (85), Ramsay (86), and Pedder (79). From this list it will be seen that two (Bell and Pedder) retired without completing their full twenty-five years, and therefore obtained only proportional pensions; two more (Cornell and Thornton) retired in 1881, directly their time was up; one retired in each of the years 1883, 1884 and 1885, two in 1886, and one in 1887; the last, Mr. Peile, going straight to the Home Council. The four who remain are now of thirty-two years' standing, and the last, Mr. Peile, going straight to the Home Council. The four who remain are now of thirty-two years' standing, and have only three more years to serve before they must retire. In the second year of Competition, 1857, twenty Civilians came out to India, and of these only seven still remain in the Service. They are Messrs. W. Young (N.W.P.), Quinton (N.W.P.), Morgan (B), Sir C. Elliott (I), Wall (N.W.P.), A. Smith (B). and Hon. J. B. Richey (Bo). Of the remaining thirteen eight have retired and five have died. The five who died were Messrs. Sweeting (58). Walton (76), Wyllie (70), Falcon (76), and Thelwall (58), It will be seen that two died in the first year of their service, then none died for twelve years till 1870, and after six years more two more died in 1876. The eight who have retired are Messrs. Boult for twelve years till 1870, and after six years more two more died in 1876. The eight who have retired are Messrs. Boult (59), C. Robertson (83), Wilton Oldham (77), Furrell (63), E.S. Robertson (77), Newnham (82), Worthington (78), and Taylor (77). From this it will be seen that all but two retired without completing their twenty-five years service, no less than four graded pensions in 1877-78; while two, Messrs. Boult and Furrell, retired very early in their careers at two and six years' standing respectively. The remaining two, Messrs. C. Robertson and Newnham, served their full time. The seven who are still in the service are now of thirty-one years' standwho are still in the service are now of thirty-one years' standing, and have only four more years to serve before retirement.

INDIAN POSTAL ARRANGEMENTS. (Poona Observer.)

The Post Office revenue in India is very great, and it is only due to the public that a portion of that revenue should be applied for the purpose of improving the working of the department. There are, it is true, a great many obstables to contend with, and a great many difficulties to be encountered; and it is also a well known fact that perfection in connection with the Post Office in India can never for a moment be ex pected. What we want to see is an attempt on the part of the authorities to check, if not altogether nip in the bud, some of the many growing evils. For instance, the first thing that should be done is to procure good, honest, hardworking subordinates, on whom some reliance could be placed, who would not feel themselves above the duties of their particular office, whatever that may chance to be. At the present time many of the subordinates go droning and crawling about, with just as much life and animation as if they were fast approaching a state of petrifaction, and had no duties whatever to perform. We have at times heard it remarked that the Post Office subordinates are but poorly remunerated for the duties they per form. No matter how small their stipend may be, if they are paid in accordance with the manner in which they acquit thempaid in accordance with the manner in which they acquit themselves of the various duties they so slovenly perform, they are well paid indeed. The authorities should raise the salaries of every one of the subordinates. No matter how persevering the Post master General and his assistants may be, one act of the Post master General and his assistants may be, one act of stupidity, neglect, or dishonesty on the part of the servants of the Department would mar all, and render the care and precaution of the higher officials null and void. We have heard, qefore now, of circumstances occurring by which the peons werb not induced by a felonious intention to destroy letters; but chose to do so in preference to delivering them. Yes, they chose to do so in preference to delivering them. Yes, they were too tired to deliver their letters in a proper manner; and preferred the risk of a severe punishment, if found out, to that of putting themselves to extra trouble and inconvenience. If the pay of all these grades were materially increased, we see no reason why good and trustworthy servants could not be obtained, on whom the utmost reliance could be placed. If this plan were adopted (and the immense profits of the department are equal to it), there is very little doubt that a very great change would soon be perceptible in the working of the Department; and the frequent complaints that are now made would, or the cause of them, soon cease to exist. The public could ensure something like regularity in receiving letters, and would not at times be put to considerable inconvenience, and considerable inconvenience, and would not at the proper time. of not receiving them at the proper time. Again, too, if several gentlemen connected with the English Post Office, possessing great experience, were to come out to India for the purpose of holding positions of trust and responsibilty in the Department; if the direction was given over to their hands, after they made themselves somewhat acquainted with the man ner in which the Department is managed at the present time, a very short time we think, would suffice to bring about a great change for the better.

THE OPTIMIST VIEW OF INDIAN FINANCE (Native Opinion.)

Optimists like Mr. Maclean and Sir Richard Temple may well hold to their sweet opinion, that the more you milk the Indian milch-cow the more prosperous it will become. Mr. Maclean, in his début on the motion of Mr. Samuel Smith, taxes Lord Ripon for having reduced the salt-tax, and caused a loss of £1,500,000 every year. But in attacking Lord Ripon, Mr. Maclean has lost sight of the economic principle,—the larger the consumption larger the revenue, and had he but taken the trouble to study salt-revenue statistics since the time the duty was reduced, he would have found that the reduction in duty was as much justifiable under the financial and other circumstances then ruling, as his attack on our noble ex-Viceroy was most gratuitous. But the height of absurdity of Mr. Maclean's argument here becomes more transparent; while he has no conscientious scruple to tax Lord Ripon for reduction of the salt duty he has not a word to say against a most unjustifiable measure of his Lordship—we mean the abolition of the cotton import duties. In the case of salt the revenue was to be recouped by increased consumption, but, in the case of the import duties, the abolition was a tremendous loss, a clean sweep of a most flourishing and the least felt source of our revenue. The abolition was avowedly in the interests of the Manchester trader; but, of course, according to Mr. Maclean's economic ethics, that was no loss to the Indian revenues. This zeal and patriotism of Mr. Maclean's in the interests of India is too transparent to deceive the Indian people, and he and men of his stamp had better give up this self-imposed task of taking Indian interests under their care unrequested. From Bombay to London is indeed a far distant cry; but we, along with our brethren, may undertake to tell these pseudo-Indian patriots that India, as regards her immediate interests, has greater confidence in unprejudiced men of the stamp of Mr. Samuel Smith and others than themselves. We may allow them the pleasure of grandiose eloquence on behalf of In

Dr. Greeg, now Civil Surgeon of Hooghly, will, it is said, officiate as Protector of Emigrants when Dr. Grant goes on leave. Dr. Greeg's place at Hooghly will be taken by Dr. Monteith, who served in Bengal for some years before the formation of the Chief Commissionership of Assam and has now reverted to the Lower Provinces.

SECRET SOCIETIES IN CALCUTTA. - A Calcutta paper, commenting on the recent Chinese fracas in Circular road, says: —We shall not attain to the true significance of the desperate fight which came off between so many Chinese in Circular-road the other day if we view it merely as an ordinary fracas. Were there nothing else underlying it than a mere unpremeditated engagement entered into on the spur of the moment between two sides who happened to take opposite views of some passing subject there would be little more to be said about it. It would be what might happen anywhere, and between members of any other race. But the names of the two factions who were ranged on either side in such strong rivalry—Ghi Hin and Ho Sing—supply us with a revelation as to the causes why so many men were engaged, why a mere trifle set them on, and why the battle raged so furiously. mere trifle set them on, and why the battle raged so furiously. At the same time, these names show that such dangerous affrays may be looked for among the Chinese, and have to be specially guarded against. Here, in Calcutta, the Celestials are in a very small minority, and the existence of Ghi Hins and Ho Sings may not matter much to the general public or the police, who, however, in the fight above alluded to, had enough to do, and had to be specially reinforced by a European force before any capture could be attempted; but in other parts of India, Burma for instance, where the Chinese muster very strong, the subject is one of considerable importance, and affects the peace and security of the civil population as well as very strong, the subject is one of considerable importance, and affects the peace and security of the civil population as well as the due and efficient performance of police duties. We proceed to show this briefly. Wherever the Chinese have emigrated to, in California, Australia, the Dutch Settlements, Singapore and Sarawak, they are found to be honeycombed by the Hoey or secret societies. Originally formed in China, they attain their full force and vigour in outlying countries, where under British freedom and laws they find themselves practically unchecked till some desperate fight reveals their existence. These secret societies, of which the Ghi Hin and Ho Sing are the chief, hold their victims with the grip of a vice, body and soul. There are headmen and members initiated in the mysteries, with the most direful threats, which are actually carried out. We are not sure if the Nihilism of Russia can be worse. It is, however, where the police Russia can be worse. It is, however, where the police are few, or the Government weak and detached, that these societies are found to be prominent public pests. As the London Standard pointed out not long ago, "murder and incendiarism, torturing and maiming are of every-day occurrence. They monopolise several branches of commerce, and the interpreter is killed forthwith. They utterly command the labour market, regulate wages, and own neither law nor justice." In Sarawak the evil was found to be so serious that the Government made a law in 1870 decreeing death to every member ipso facto. In Singapore, time after time, they have raised fatal riots, some of which have had to be quelled by calling out the military. At last the Straits Government had to enact that these societies should have their headmen and members registered by the police, and be made responsible for crimes and outbreaks. In the Dutch possessions in Sumatra these societies have been so troublesome, as fostering crime of every kind, that there also the military have had to be called out, and several headmen deported. From the recent fight their existence in Calcutta is revealed. Though it may not matter much here, it matters a great deal in Burma, and steps should be taken to ascertain more about them. Their existence anywhere is a fearful evil.

MADRAS.

A CENTRAL and representative association for Native Christians is about to be formed in Madras, with the object of promoting union and co-operation in matters affecting their social, moral, and political welfare. The work of the association will not be restricted to any particular method, but every vailable means will be employed for the advancement and welfare of the Native Christian community. The president is to be Mr. Subramanyan, a barrister: the vice-president Mr. Satthianadham; and twelve persons are to be on the committee.

Acting upon a communication from the Government of India, regarding a practicable scheme for a supply of water to Bangalore, the Station Municipality resolved to take up General Fischer's scheme, in the absence of any other submitted to it, to test it thoroughly, and to send it on to the Government of Madras for their opinion, as to whether it would supply the Bangalore troops with water as well as the civil population. Also to submit it to the Mysore Durbar to ascertain whether it will supply the Pettah or Native town as well. The matter is likely to come to a head soon.

BOMBAY.

The Bombay Government have published the following Resolution:—Bai Motlibai (through her son, Mr. Nowrojee Manockjee Wadia) having placed at the disposal of his Excellency the Governor the site known as the Parsonage at Mazagon, adjoining the Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy Hospital, the buildings thereon, and a further sum of Rs. 1½ lakhs in cash, for the construction of a charitable hospital, his Excellency the Governor in Council has much pleasure in accepting this munificent gift, and is pleased to direct that the proposed hospital shall be designated the Bai Motlibai Hospital. The Architectural Executive Engineer should prepare plans and estimates for the requisite buildings. The total cost should be estricted to the amount of the donation. The munificence of Bai Motlibai should be suitably acknowled by letter.

Ar the Appellate Court, before Mr. Justice Birdwood and Mr. Justice Parsons, an important question as to the jurisdiction of the Bombay High Court in the cases of European British subjects in Sind was disposed of in connection with the case of James Grant, late agent of the Kurrachee branch of the Bank of Bombay, who was sentenced to six months' simple imprisonment by Mr. Francis Gibbons, city magistrate of Kurrachee, for criminal breach of trust as an agent, under section 409 of the Indian Penal Code. The Appellate Court called for this case on a review of the city magistrate's criminal return for January last, which was forwarded to it by the Judge of the Sadar Court in Sind as the return of the trial of a European British subject. On an examination of the record and proceedings, the sentence passed by the magistrate appeared to the Appellate Court to be inadequate; and if the accused could be regarded as a European British subject, it would have been illegal. The Appellate Court, accordingly issued a notice to the accused to show cause why the conviction and sentence should not be reversed, and why he should not be committed to the High Court for trial. It was argued by Mr. Inverarity, the counsel for the accused, that as he did not claim at the trial to be dealt with as a European British subject, he could no now be regarded as such, and that as the offence was committed in Sind, where the highest court of criminal appeal or revision was the Sadar Court, the case fell under the general rules of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and not under the special rules contained in Chapter 33, and that, therefore, the High Court at Bombay had no jurisdiction to review the case under Chapter 32 of the Code. Mr. Justice Birdwood, in a long judgment which he delivered in the case, stated that where a European British subject waived his right to be dealt with as such by the magistrate before whom he was tried, he should not assert it in any subsequent stage of the same case. The accused thereby lost all the benefits of the

THERE were three candidates before the Punjab University this year for the degree of M.A. in English, of whom only one, a private candidate, Lala Sunder Das Suri, was successful. He is the Head Master of the Municipal Board School, Mooltan, and a member of the Municipal Committee of that place.

A PROPOSAL has been before the Punjab Government to grant Mr. A. Broadway 2,500 acres of land in the Mooltan District, for the use of a horse-run for rearing young stock for Native Cavalry regiments; but although the Government s disposed to help Mr. Broadway, it cannot, until further

NATIVE PRESS.

Lord Dalhousie and Lord Dufferin.—What is th difference between Lord Dufferin and Lord Dalhousie? Just after his arrival in India Lord Dalhousie was involved in a war with the Sikhs, and he made arrangements for the administration of the Punjab. It is true that Lord Dufferin was not in wolved in a war with the Sikhs, but, owing to the conduct of Maharaja Dhulip Sing, his Lordship has had to keep a watchful eye upon the Punjab. The conquest of the Punjab was the first achievement of Lord Dalhousie, and the settlement of the Punjab frontier is the best performance of Lord Dufferin. Lord Dalhousie undertook a war against Burma, and annexed Lower Burma. Lord Dufferin undertook a war against Burma, and annexed North Burma. Lord Dalhousie was a devourer of Native States, and Lord Dufferin is also of that nature. The provinces of Oudh, Satara, Nagpur, Jhansi, and Berar were annexed by Lord Dalhousie. Lord Dufferin has not as yet distinctly ruined a Native State, but he has weakened, and is weakening, the rulers of Bhopal, Nepal, Haidarabad, Gwalior, Kashmir, and Rewa. The difference is that Lord Dufferin is not so hot-tempered as Lord Dalhousie. The devouring policy of Dalhousie caused the rebellion of the Mahrattas and who can say that this policy of Lord Dufferin will not bring forth similar results?—The Bangabasi.

The Dufferin Demonstration.—Agitations on political matters have improved the condition of the country. The people of India have discovered who is their friend and who is their enemy. This has become clear from the demonstration in honour of the departure of Lord Dufferin. The public, who sincerely shed tears for the departure of Lord Ripon, have displayed hatred towards the demonstration in honour of Lord Dufferin. The Native papers on behalf of the public have strongly protested against that meeting. The Native Associations are opposed to it. Lord Dufferin is the Viceroy of India, and a demonstration in his honour could not be held without the assistance of the police. Can there be anything more shameful to the Viceroy than this? This sad occurrence took place solely because this meeting was held in the name of the public.—The Charuvarta.

High-handed Officials.—The policy of the Viceroy has been approved in the address presented at the Town Hall. But one thing was very improper, that was that the address was presented in the name of the people. There was a great deal of advice in the speech of the Viceroy, but no reference has been made to subordinate officials. His speech would have been complete if some advice had been given to the officials like Sir Lepel Griffin and high-handed Magistrates.—The Nababibhakar and Sadharani.—His Lordship now presides over the destinies of 250 millions of Indians, and will be hereafter Ambassador at Rome. Here in India his Lordship used to get two-and-a-half lakhs of rupees a year, exclusive of allowances, but in Rome he will only get Rs. 400,000 a-year. On hearing this the people of India believe that it is a punishment on Lord Dufferin, who passed the Tenancy Act, deprived Burma of independence, imposed an income-tax, raised the salt-tax, and took steps for annexing Sikkim.—The Dakka Prakash.

Public Service Commission.—According to the report of the Commission, the limits of age of the Native candidates should be raised from 19 to 23 years. This is likely to afford greater facilities to Native candidates. But we cannot say why they suggested that the examination should still be held in London. The leading Native witnesses unanimously said that a similar examination to that held in London ought to be held in India. The Commission has not adopted that suggestion. This must be considered a great misfortune to India.—The Shomeprokash.

POVERTY OF INDIA.—God alone knows whether the miseries of India have increased under the English. But it is certain that India has become more impoverished under them. Under the Mahomedan rule India had not a debt of 160 crores of rupees and a revenue of 80 crores. There were no foreign officials then. Twelve crores were not spent in salaries and pensions, nor did eighty per cent. of this amount go to foreign countries. There was no exchange difficulty, nor was Indian money sent to defray expenses in England. Under the English the poverty of India has increased considerably.—The Bangabasi.

KASHMIR.—It is said that Kashmir is now under the influence of an evil star, and that this Paradise of the Earth will soon be annexed by the British. From Bombay and Madras troops have been sent to Kashmir. Will the prophecy of Ranjit Sing that "all will be red" prove false? In Lord Dufferin's régime the Native Princes will be ruined.—The Charuvarta.

THE NEW INDUSTRIAL ERA IN INDIA.

(Concluded.)

The third factor in the Indo-European trade, namely, the comparative value of silver in the East and West, has played an important part in the recent development of exports. is not necessary to assert that the fall in the price of silver has created the Indian wheat trade. But it is evident that the has created the Indian wheat trade. But it is evident that the comparatively high purchasing power of silver in India, together with its decreased value expressed in the gold standard of England, has enabled the shipping firms of India to do a vast amount of export business at a profit, which they could not otherwise have done at all. It is also probable that any further decline in the price of silver in England will greatly stimulate the exports of staples from India. The anticipation that the purchasing power of silver in India would soon fall to stimulate the exports of staples from India. The anticipation that the purchasing power of silver in India would soon fall to something near the altered English ratio between silver and gold has not been realised. It was argued that India had always sought to purchase silver from the West, and that the cheapness of silver in the West would induce India to absorb large quantities of the metal. This would have been true of the India of antiquity and of the India of the Company; but it is not true of the India of the Queen.

India now prefers to take payment for her exports in British goods, and this preference has distinctly increased, notwithstanding the cheapening of silver. As a matter of fact. India standing the cheapening of silver. As a matter of fact, India imported only nine millions sterling of silver and gold money annually during the fourteen years since 1873, when silver has been cheap, as against nearly 14 millions annually during the preceding fourteen (1859 to 1873), when silver was dear. The anticipation that India had an unlimited capacity to absorb the redundance of silver has not been fulfilled. It must now be dismissed from the problem of how to dispose of the increasbe dismissed from the problem of now to dispose of the increasing production of silver; and so far as absorption by India is concerned, the price of silver may still go on falling. The larger supplies of money required by India for her augmented commerce are yielded partly by the modern appliances of mercantile credit, cheques, and the Government paper currency. To some extent they are also obtained from the internal hoards of silver in India. Not only is less silver absorbed for hoarding, but there is evidence that metal has been brought forth from previous hoards for circulation as coin. Hoarding is, in from previous hoards for circulation as coin. Hoarding is, in fact, no longer a necessity in India, where every man can now use or display his wealth with safety. It has become an anachronism to keep money hidden away, when its open employment will yield a secure profit. In this respect also India has entered on a new commercial era. That era is marked not only by an extended production of agricultural staple for sale in Europe, but also by a reorganisation of the manufacturing system in India. As India has always been, and still is, a country of petite culture, so down to our days it was a country of small domestic industries. The manufactures of India were the products of the housefather and his family, living together under one cottage roof. This system was disciplined and perfected by caste. For the caste practically operated as a hereditary trade guild, which not only insisted on the proper training and good conduct of its members, but also developed a certain transmitted dexterity in manipulation. The results were a cheapness in production, a fineness in workmanship, and an artistic perception in form and colour, which, during many centuries, gave Indian fabrics the command of the European market. In silks and cottons it seemed for a time, indeed, that the Indian textiles would strangle the growing industry of England. A law was passed at the beginning of the last century forbidding these fabrics from the East to be used in Great Britain. In 1721 the wear ing of any printed calicoes whatsoever was prohibited. wards the prohibition was modified in favour of the British manufacturer, allowing calicos to be worn, "provided the warp thereof was entirely of linen yarn." During nearly three-quarters of a century Englishmen firmly believed that English cotton-goods could not compete with Indian ones, and that the only chance for the English industry was to lay prohibitive

The development of steam machinery during the first half of the present century reversed the situation. The hand-loom of India could no longer compete with the Lancashire factory. A period of terrible suffering followed for the Indian weavers. Whole communities of them disappeared, in some cases perishwhere communities of them disappeared, in some cases perishing, in others drifting hopelessly into the landless labouring classes. During famines, they were the people who starved first. A change of fashion in the West Indies took away their last foreign customer, while the old tax levied on their looms was still, in some provinces, exacted in India. By degrees, however, large numbers were absorbed into agriculture, and many old weaving hamlets now survive as communes of husbandmen. A local trade in stout country cottons which will stand the daily washing in the village tank still lingers in many districts, but yield a poor subsistence to the weaver. Thirty years ago the ruin of Indian cotton manufactures seemed final

e now perceive that it was only a transition stage. hand-loom of India had, indeed, been crushed by Lancashire steam power. But India began to realise that the same agency which had destroyed the old industry might be used to revive it in a new form. A mill for the manufacture of cotton yarn it in a new form. A mill for the manufacture of cotton yarn and cloth was set up in Bombay in 1854. By 1884 there were over 100 cotton and jute mills at work in India, with 22,000 looms, 2,000,000 spindles, and giving employment to over 110,000 people. To those who have gone carefully into the question, it is apparent that even the rapid progress thus indicated is merely the commencement of a great industrial development, whose eventual dimensions it is impossible to foresee.

In textile manufactures, as in the production of food-staples, India starts with certain advantages on her side. material and the market for the manufactured goods lie at the Indian millowner's door, thus saving a double freight to England and back. Labour is cheap, abundant, docile, and not liable to strike. The enterprise yielded a profit even under the necessity of starting it by adult hands. The economical division of processes between men, women, and children has now been worked out, and the natural capability of the Indian races for the operations of textile industry is coming effectively into play. I am told, indeed, that an adult English hand can seldom acquire the requisite delicacy of touch, unless the fingers have been early trained to the loom; while in India grown-up men and women easily learn the work. On the other shand, the Indian millowner has to overcome several counterwillian difficulties. The cost of constitution including the other hand, the Indian millowner has to overcome several countervailing difficulties. The cost of erection, including spindles and fitting up, was said in 1877 to be about three times as much as in England. The difference has since been reduced and will be reduced still further as the supply of skilled Native engineers and contractors increases. The interest on capital in India is also higher, although in this respect, too, the difference is decreasing. The cost of fuel was also much greater in India, but is being diminished as railways open up the Indian coal-India is also higher, although in this respect, too, the difference is decreasing. The cost of fuel was also much greater in India, but is being diminished as railways open up the Indian coalfields. Another important consideration, difficult to estimate in all its bearings, is the quality of Indian cotton, which is short-stapled, and does not admit of being spun into the finer kinds of yarn. Consequently the Indian mills can turn out only the lower "counts" of yarns, and the coarser qualities of piece-goods, leaving English imports of the higher classes untouched by their competition. India asks for no protection for her growing manufactures. If her financial necessities should compel her to have again recourse to import Customs, should compel her to have again recourse to import Customs, the competing qualities of the coarser English piece-goods will be admitted free.

This revolution in the Indian system of manufacture was compelled by English competition in Lancashire, and was initiated by British capital in India. It is being developed by Native enterprise. Some of the most prosperous of the Indian cotton mills are now owned by Native capitalists. In the earlier stages the outlay was very great, and some of the older mills find difficulty in competing with their new and more cheaply constructed rival. The significance of this fact may be realised from the circumstance that within Bombay island the cost of working varies in the different mills from 17 to 29 per cent. of the value of the raw cotton used. Another significant fact is that the mill enterprise is no longer concentrated round Calcutta and Bombay, but is taking root in various local centres of industry; nor is it confined to cotton, but has been successfully applied to jute and wool. There is evidence to show that we are only at the beginning of a new era of Indian textile manufactures, an era of the association of capital and labour with steam-power on a great scale. Already Indian cotton are competing with Manchester goods, not only in India itself, but in the Straits, in China, and the markets of Eastern Asia.

In forming our ideas about the future of this industry, we must remember that the advantages on the side of the Indian mill owner are permanent, while the disadvantages under which he has laboured are diminishing. Apart from the cheapening of coal and the growth of the Native engineering profession, the decrease in the two initial elements of the cost of contractions and the interest on entitle has a marked offer. struction and the interest on capital has a marked effect. example, when a mill cost three times more to erect in India than in England, and when the interest expected was 10 per cent, for an experimental enterprise in India as against 5 per cent, in an established industry in England, the yearly charge for capital on a mill costing £100,000 in England would have been £5,000, and £30,000 a year for a similar mill costing £300,000 in India. The Indian mill was thus weighted at starting with a charge for capital six times greater than the English mill. If it can now be erected at about double the English cost, the charge, at 7 per cent., which is the rate of interest now expected in India, would be reduced £14,000, or less than one-half. Apart, therefore, from decreased cost of working, the new Indian mills start (or will before long start) with less than one-half the charge to bear. England will always be in advance of India as regards new machinery and economy in mechanical appliances. English labour will for long be more efficient, although the growth of a hereditary class of mill-workers in India will gradually lessen the difference. On the other hand, labour and the raw material are fundamentally cheaper in India than in England; while the interest on capital, the expected rate of profits, the cost of supervision, and the price of fuel, are normally decreasing charges in favour of the Indian mills.

During the first thirty years of the Queen's rule in India that country has firmly established herself as a competing producer with the English farmer and with the English cotton manufacturer. There are indications that within the next thirty years she will also enter into competition with the English ironmaster. Iron smelting has for ages been a hamlet indication in India. industry in India, very much as cotton weaving was a domestic manufacture. In both cases, the Indian article was good in quality; but in both, the Indian method of production by individual families was unable to stand against English co-operation of labour, capital, coal, and steam power. The raw materials for iron-smelting abound in India, but they have to contend against the difficulty of distance. The modern processes of matellinear have moreover been developed for contend against the difficulty of distance. The modern processes of metallurgy have, moreover, been developed for European coals with a small percentage of ash; the percentage of ash in the Indian coals is six to ten times greater. The same difficulty presented itself, however, in the early application of Indian coal to locomotives and river steamers; and it has been overcome. Coal mining on any large scale really dates in India from the opening of the East India Railway, say thirty years ago. At the commencement of that period almost the whole coal used for steam purposes in Bengal had to be imported from England. But one by one the difficulties in the application of Indian coal have been got over and nineteen-twentieths of the England. But one by one the difficulties in the application of Indian coal have been got over, and nineteen-twentieths of the coal used in Bengal, with its great railway system and steam industries, are now raised in the country. India has inexhaustible coal-fields, and an unlimited supply of flux and iron-ore. The problem of iron-smelting in India is partly the geographical problem of distance, and partly the chemical or mechanical problem of applying coal with 14 to 20 per cent. of ash to the processes of metallurgy. Iron-smelting in India on a large scale is now well advanced in the experimental stage, and its commercial success has been more than once stage, and its commercial success has been more than once asserted. Practically it may be said to have reached the point which the cotton-mills had reached thirty years ago.

I have confined my remarks to only three industries, in two of which India has already established herself as a competitor in the world's market with England, while in the third she appears likely before long to do so. For the time allowed compels me to choose between making a few matters quite clear, or attempting a wider but less practical survey. I ought, however, to leave no doubt as to my own conviction that Indian wheat and Indian jute-bags and cotton goods are only the forerunners of other commodities in which India is destined to compete keenly with the English producer. Nor should I shrink from repeating the generalisation that the world seems now to be entering on a new era of competition—the competinow to be entering on a new era of competition—the competi-tion betw en the productive powers of the tropics and of the temperate zone. Down to the present age, India has been practically disqualified in the competition of the bulkier agricul-tural staples (common to England and India), by distance and the cost of carriage. She has been practically disqualified in the competition of manufactures by her want of steam power, and by the absence of the association of labour and capital on a large scale. During the last thirty years these disqualifica-tions have been to some extent removed; during the next thirty years they will be removed in a still larger measure.

India is now waiting for an English statesman with breadth of mind to grasp the situation, and with firmness of purpose to give effect to his views. India has had conquering viceroys and consolidating viceroys; she now waits for a commercial viceroy. A whole series of economic questions of the first magnitude are impending -questions which only an English statesman of the first class will have the courage and authority to effectively deal with. Take, as a single example, the great railway system. Government has got the monopoly of the railway system. Government has got the monopoly of the carrying trade in India. Is it to use that monopoly as a source of revenue by means of high rates, which act ultimately as a tax on production and a tax on trade? Or is it to content itself with the actual interest on its outlay, and thus give an enormous impulse to Indian agriculture, commerce, and manufactures by low charges of carriage? The reduction of railway rates in India means a cheaper loaf for England. But railway rates in India means a cheaper loat for England. But it does not necessarily mean, as some of our native friends suppose, a harder struggle for life in India. For there is plenty of land in India if the people could only be brought to it, and plenty of food in India if it could only be brought cheaply to the people. The railways are in fact opening up new grain-producing areas, in which the population is sparse, and the power of producing surplus food almost inexhaustible.

Ne ther does the competition of India in manufactured goods mean the impoverishment of England. For the most striking feature of Indian trade is that with the growth of her own manufactures she seems to have an ever-growing fund for the purchase of goods from England. In 1873, at the begin-ning of the period under review, India could afford to buy only 31 millions sterling of imported merchandise. She now takes 51 millions. With the export of India's food staples, and the increase of India's manufactures, changes in production must take place in England. But India's present gain is not England's ultimate loss. It will, in the end, be a gain to England in common with the whole world.

A MISSING CHAPTER OF THE INDIAN MUTINY.*

The Mutiny of 1857 was an event so stupendous in itself, so far-reaching in its results, so glorious as regards the display of high courage and fearless bravery on the part of our fellow-countrymen, that General Showers' "Missing Chapter," viewed merely as a means pour passer le temps, may well be read with pleasure and profit; but this, it may be assumed, is not the object with which it has been written The late Political Resident in the Meywar States seems more anxious about his own pleasure and profit; but this, it may be assumed, is not the object with which it has been written The late Political Resident in the Meywar States seems more anxious about his own reputation than the history which centres round him. Nor is this, perhaps, altogether wrong. A man's fair name should be dear to him, and we have no fault to find with the feelings which prompt a subordinate to endeavour to remove the aspersions of his superior officers. Nor are we particularly concerned to bolster up Brigadier-General Lawrence. To the judgment of not a few, ourselves amongst the number, that officer, owing to the relationship which he bore to the ever-lamented Sir Henry Lawrence, lived in an atmosphere of distinction for which his abilities—albeit by no means inconsiderable—did not, perhaps, entirely fit him; and it is quite possible that during the crisis in India, when England's supremacy tottered in the balance, he was too heavily weighted. But he is dead, and it would serve no purpose, from an historical point of view, to reopen the controversy. Suffice it that in Rajputana things went well, mainly owing to the loyalty and good conduct of the great Hindoo feudatory, the Maharana of Udaipur; and whether this fortunate circumstance was the outcome of the advice given by "A" or "B" is immaterial from a national point of view, all important as it undoubtedly is to the parties concerned. What is far more worthy of consideration is the Essay which concludes the volume, in regard to which pages of argument might be filled with ease, and, perhaps, advantage. But space is inexorable, and we content ourselves, and possibly our readers, by a bare assertion that the abolition of the East India Company, and the assumption by the Crown of the direct control of the Government of India, have rendered the administration of affairs in the East little less than hopeless. Old John Company served as a buffer between East and West, which, once removed, left the two rivals respetually at warfare. Sunny India can never be governed acco always must form, an integral portion of everyday life in the land of the Great Moghuls. England does not realise this fact; hence, in the fulness of time, may come to pass the prediction of Malcolm, that "we should lose India on the floor of the House of Commons."

The fourth volume of the "Greville Memoirs" deals with the period between the accession of Queen Victoria and the defeat of the Whigs in 1841. It is, perhaps, more interesting than its predecessors, in so far as it refers to events and personages more near to our own generation. Yet, withal, in one notable instance, the hands on the dial of time are pushed back in a manner which can hardly be realised in these days of luxurious and easy travelling. Railways are mentioned for the first time. The entry is curious:—"Nothing can be more comfortable than the vehicle in which I was put, a sort of chariot with two places, and there is nothing disagreeable about it but the occasional whiffs of stinking air which it is impossible to exclude altogether. The first sensation is a slight degree of nervousness and a feeling of being run away with, but a sense of recovery soon supervenes, and the velocity is delightful." delightful.'

But the chief interest will centre round the personal portraits of the personages of the time. Lord Melbourne, the Prime Minister, stands forth as a weak, vacillating, uncertain Statesman; "all in all at Buckingham Palace, but very little in Downing-street"—an allusion to his being a persona grata as regards the youthful Queen, who, on her assumption of power, selected the Whig Minister as "her guide, counsellor, and friend." Diametrically opposite from every point of view was Lord Palmerston—plucky Pam. of later years—who exercised an absolute despotism at the Foreign Office; every member of the Cabinet bowed to him, his sway was unchallenged, and in such circumstances of course he triumphed. What a towns to the weak knowledge was a large plant of the member of the Cabinet bowed to him, his sway was unchallenged, and in such circumstances of course he triumphed. What a terror to the weak-kneed, lymphatic drivellers of the present generation, with whom "compromise" is a policy, and concession the aim and object of political life?

This volume, too, portrays the illustrious Duke of Wellington as a statesman of the highest rank. No considerations of expediency, no thoughts of party gains or loss, ever led the hero of Waterloo from the paths of the most conscientious rectitude. No underhand action or mean, paltry quibble could be imputed to him; and he had his reward in the esteem and affection of every one who loves uprightness, and despises crooked ways and disingenuous devices. Other great but lesser luminaries are crowded into the group of historical personages—Gladstone, making speeches which placed him "in the front rank of the House of Commons;" Brougham, petulant, uncertain, and incomprehensible, but, withal, able, learned, and of unsurpassed eloquence; Lord John Russell, testy, painstaking, troublesome, and peculiar; Talleyrand, urbane and kind, passing the end of life as tranquilly as its commencement was spent, "in the very tempest and whirlwind of political agitation." Clarendon, Macaulay, Louis Napoleon, Lady Blessington, and a host of minor satellites complete the list. The reader lives amidst a crowd of celebrities, and his interest is never allowed to flag for a single moment; the style is piquant yet unaffected, and the highest praise must be awarded. Mr. Greville was a "political cheffonier" of the most painstaking and careful description. The memoirs are the more to be commended, inasmuch as malevolence is an unknown vice, and maliciousness a fault conspicuous by its the more to be commended, inasmuch as malevolence is an unknown vice, and maliciousness a fault conspicuous by its

"Barker's Trade and Finance Manual," though modest in its aims, really contains a vast amount of information within its aims, really contains a vast amount of information within the limits of a comparatively small compass. The first portion deals with this country, and treats of the great heads of National Receipts and Expenditure, including a review of the leading taxes of the century. The chapter devoted to the British Colonies and Dependencies contains not only a general sketch of their acquisitions, their resources, and their trade, but a detailed account of each particular possession. Lastly, there are tables of trade, prices of gas and other commodities of raw materials, &c., and coloured maps to illustrate the geography of the places described. A careful work, it cannot fail to find support amongst the many engaged in commerce, who have need to cousult a volume of reference as accurate as it is complete.

A NATIONAL CANAL BETWEEN THE FOUR RIVERS A NATIONAL NECESSITY.+

A glance at the map will serve to show the importance of a A glance at the map will serve to show the importance of a canal which, uniting the Thames, Mersey, Severn, and Trent, would divide Great Britain into four more or less equal divisions. That such a gigantic scheme is possible from an engineering point of view may, perhaps, be conceded, though the difference of levels is an obstacle by no means easily to be surmounted. That the project could be financed, supposing it were likely to yield a fair return on capital invested, is scarcely once to question. That it would benefit the country at large is open to question. That it would benefit the country at large is possibly not to be denied; but whether or not the colossal enterprise would do all that its advocate, Mr. Lloyd, claims for it is arguable. Nor do we quite see why, as there are railways, the nation should not turn them to better account. Differential the nation should not turn them to better account. Differential rates may, nay, ought to be, abolished; the foreigner should not be placed upon a better footing than the native trader; the tariff should not be either prohibitive or unequal; one place should not be favoured and another locality slighted. The pamphlet is worthy of careful perusal, and perhaps its able author, himself a denizen of Birmingham, may well be pardoned for earnestly advocating a scheme which, whatever effect it would have upon the future of England, would most probably make that city, if not in name, at least in importance, the capital of the British Empire.

There are "horsey" villains, there are unctuous religious scoundrels, there are villains, there are unctuous religious scoundrels, there are Israelitish rogues, and Christian men of bad morals. There are designing matrons and artless maidens; there are the "jumpers of Jezreel," and the Salvationists of more widespread fame. All, too, ends so "goody-goody." The half-ruined family is saved, the merry daughter marries the man of her choice, the Jewish scoundrel loses his cash, not his honour, for the commodity was wanting, but his liberty was restricted to the four walls of a prison, and he fares badly indeed. Again we repeat Mr. Belgrave has written, to quote the words of his publisher, "an extraordinary sporting story," and we wish it the success it deserves. it deserves.

THE DEFENCE OF LONDON.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—Sir E. Hamley has been instructing the Londoners that their great banking city is not properly defended. Mr. Stanhope has been reassuring the House of Commons that he will do something for the National defence.

The best means of defending London would be the recalling home from India of 30,000 of our veteran soldiers.

You will ask, How can their places be supplied in India? By re-establishing our Local Army.

On moral grounds a local army is required in India; the soldiers would be permitted to marry, and the official stews would be abolished to the lasting credit of the British name; the families of English soldiers can all be accommodated in and near healthy hill stations.

On financial grounds the reduction of the enormous expenditure in moving regiments to India and back again would enable Government to reduce the hateful Salt Tax to the rate which was levied last year, and which yielded so satisfactory enable Government to reduce the hateful Salt Tax to the rate which was levied last year, and which yielded so satisfactory a contribution to the Exchequer.

Thirty thousand British recruits would immediately offer themselves to be enlisted in a local army; the private soldiers would have the luxury of Native servants for cleaning the barracks, &c., &c. All well-educated men would look forward to speedy promotion. In 1858 Kearney, of the 54th, received a salary of £240 a-year, and throughout Upper India there was a demand for steady soldiers.—Your obedient servant, May 7.

CHINA v. INDIAN TEA.

CHINA v. INDIAN TEA.

A "London Wholesale Tea Dealer" writes to us:—The decline of the China Tea trade and the rapidly-increasing growth of both Indian and Ceylon is now beyond dispute. The Chinaman has only himself to thank for this. Year by year the quality has been deteriorating, while that of Indian and Ceylon have much improved, hence the steadily increasing demand for the latter. The writer's experience, who is in close touch with the largest retailers in London and the country, finds a general expression of regret at the altered state of their trade. They find Ceylon tea, although liked by the consumers for the moment, they soon tire of it, and complain of the astringency and nauseousness of these and Indian kinds. Had China tea been carefully prepared and the quality maintained, it would still be the favourite beverage of the people, for there is no tea so pure and wholesome. There is still time to recover their business by sending us carefully prepared tea of better quality than they have done the last few seasons. few seasons.

SIR WILLIAM HUNTER ON INDIAN INDUSTRIES.—I.

It is to be hoped that Sir William Hunter's able paper on the new industrial era which he expects for India, which paper we have reproduced in these columns, will command a wider attention than a discussion at the Royal Colonial Institute or a passing criticism in newspaper columns. We are sorry to think that the difficulty in securing such attention is still great. The British public has always displayed the apathy of Gallio towards Indian questions unless they be such as embody the sensationalism of a mutiny or a war. There is certainly a portion of that public which pretends to take a deep interest in certain social questions in India, as was testified at the crowded meeting at Exeter Hall on Friday night, when English ladies indulged in oratory of a very open kind upon a very indelicate matter. But the worthy persons who are agitating just now about this unsavoury matter are not persons who trouble themselves with other questions affecting the relations between India and England. Where are we to look for that intelligent interest which Sir William Hunter would have awakened towards the country to which he has himself devoted so many years of labour, sympathy, and inquiry? We have long ago accepted as a compliment Napoleon's taunt that we are a nation of shopkeepers, and it is to the commercial instincts of Englishmen that Sir William Hunter appeals. But even then the difficulties of apathy and credulity have to be overcome. English investors and speculators are ready to place their confidence and their money in all sorts of schemes all over the world, but hesitate about touching anything Indian unless there be a Governmental or some other substantial guarantee to make the investment secure. Bogus companies of all nationalities, with a range, as it has been said, wide enough to include refrigerators for the North Pole and patent stoves for Central Africa, can secure shareholders, whilst sound, honest, and profitable Indian enterprises are languishing for want of a little of that British capital which is being so freely squandered in all other directions. Sir William Hunter's object was not however, so much to tempt the British capitalist, bona fide investor, or speculator into embarking in commercial ven. tures in India, as to show to one and all how the varied industries of India were expanding, and how the further development of these might affect similar industries in England. Thirty years ago a contributor to the Calcutta Review wrote:—"The commercial resources of India are yet unexplored. India may be compared to a vast storehouse with multiplied recesses crowded with an exhaustless assemblage of goods of every description. Of this, however, the existence is not known, while that of much is only suspected. At last one repository, filled, say, with cloths, is stumbled upon, and a large revenue is the consequence. A second, full of invaluable articles in the precious metals, is discovered, and immense sums are realised. A third full of cereals, a fourth containing spices, and a fifth stored with other valuable commodities, are at different times accidentally opened. But other recesses, from the public being unaware of their existence, remain an unknown and unappropriated treasure. To render them available they must be explored, examined, catalogued, and advertised to the world."

Sir William Hunter has already rendered incalculable service to India in these respects in his great work, the Gazetteer of India, but since his retirement from official life: in that country he has been using every opportunity to enlist the attention, interest, and sympathies of Englishmen at home in Indian questions. He has handled those which he has touched, whether of a political or social nature, with all his well-known powers of research, argument and persuasion; and on the present occasion, when he takes up the all-important matter of Indian commercial industries, he i not less strong or convincing. If in the brilliant essay which we have reprinted in these columns he hints too boldly for Manchester, Birmingham, and some other centres which have hitherto had a monopoly of certain industries that India threatens to be their formidable competitor in the same; he draws no gloomy picture for the British manufacturer, but shows that such competition means the mutual benefit of the competitors. As the wealth of India grows with the growth of her own manufactures so will grow her power and her desire to purchase more goods of all descriptions from England. The expansion of Indian trade cannot but be profitable to both countries. But much has yet to be done, and, as Sir William Hunter pointedly remarked, "India now waits for a commercial Viceroy.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

According to present arrangements Major-General Sir George White will return to Mandalay at the expiration of his three months' leave to England. He will have to wait: some time longer before a divisional command falls vacant in India, though in the natural order of things he is bound to receive it in due course.

COLONEL J. C. STEWART, Commanding the 7th Bengal Cavalry, lately returned from Burma, will probably proceed home on leave next month.

THERE are not likely to be many vacant commands of regiments in the Bengal Army this year. Colonel Chapman, 8th B.C., has to vacate on the 12th of September, and Colonel Kauntze, 17th B.C., on December 19th. In the Infantry Colonel Inglis, 6th B.L., and Colonel Cubitt, V.C., 43rd B.L., complete their seven years' tenure of regimental command on June 10th and August 12th, respectively.

DEPUTY SURGEON-GENERAL FARRELL on return from Field Service will, it is expected, be posted to the vacant circle of

CAPTAIN J. B. TAPSELL, Inspector of Army Schools, has lately received orders from the Director-General of Military Education to proceed home to England, and will leave Umballa in the course of a few days. He has served almost a lifetime in

THE number of troops at Pedong, the base of the Sikkim Expedition, has been reduced to fifty men, all that is required being the protection of the stores there.

Some reports have recently appeared of the proposed transfer of the headquarters of the office of Commissary-General, Eastern Circle, Bengal, from Meerut to Calcutta. There is no foundation for the rumour.

THE Government of India have sanctioned the despatch of the details of No. 3 Battery, 1st Brigade, Scottish Division, Royal Artillery, at Govindgarh to Rurki, with the remainder of the battery, and to their relief a detachment of No. 9 Battery, 1st Brigade, Eastern Division, Royal Artillery, from Ferozepore.

Among the General Orders of the Commander-in-Chief appear the Army Orders issued by the Horse Guards, relating to the restoration of forfeited service in the case of soldiers who confessed to desertion when the jubilee pardon was offered. Each case is to be specially submitted to the Adjutant-General in England, with a view to the restoration of the service forfeited when the soldier concerned may complete a period of three years' exemplary service, as required by Section 161 of the Army Act.

THE Orders regarding the Reserve of the Native Army have now been published. It is notified that as many men as will volunteer, up to a maximum of 100 per regiment, should be passed forthwith into the Reserve, irrespective of the present strength of the battalion.

THE headquarters and five troops of the 7th Bengal Cavalry, which recently arrived at Allahabad from field service in Burma, were inspected by General Lynch, Commanding the Division. The General expressed himself highly pleased with the out-turn of the regiment, especially after the hard work which it had done in Burma. It reflected great credit upon Colonel Stewart and the officers serving under him. There were 270 men present on parade.

THE families of non-commissioned officers and soldiers on the Indian Unattached Lists when sent home will in future be allowed free passages to their homes from the port of dis-embarkation in England.

THERE is much natural speculation, and among cantonment householders much natural anxiety, with regard to the long threatened order reorganising Divisional Commands. It may, therefore, be explained at once that the changes, whatsoever they may prove to be, will only affect the commands, and, of course, the Staff Officers attached thereto. The locations of the rank and file will not be affected. Where the barracks the rank and file will not be affected. are, there will the battalions remain.

The Duke of Cambridge's protest against sending to India soldiers who have not reached the age of twenty has been endorsed in the most unqualified way. The annual sanitary returns show that the death-rate among "boy soldiers" in India is terribly high, typhoid being the disease which is peculiarly fatal among them. The deaths from this fever among soldiers in their first and second years of service increased from 331 per mille in 1877 to 863 in 1886; and medical officers have again and again reported that the extreme youth of the soldiers predisposes them to enteric fever. The disease recurs every year in regiments after the drafts The disease recurs every year in regiments after the drafts arrive from England, and not the most elaborate sanitary measures can check the outbreaks. The percentage of men measures can check the outbreaks. The percentage of men invalided in the first four years of their service has risen from 48 in the period 1871-75 to 68 in 1881-85, and there can be no doubt that this great increase has been mainly due to sending annually to this country some 3,000 boys under the age of twenty. Statistical tables by the score might be quoted to prove this contention, but we doubt if anyone will venture to dispute it.

THE proceedings have just been published of a Court Martial held at Mooltan on March 2, at which Private James Carlton, West Yorkshire Regiment, was charged with attempting to shoot Lieutenant-Colonel Lemon. On January 19 the prisoner had loaded his rifle, and was about to discharge it, when he was disarmed. He was sentenced to 10 years' penal serviture, and ordered to be discharged with ignominy from the Service. The sentence has been confirmed by the Commander-in-Chief.

INDIAN CIVIL SERVANTS AND PRIVATE FIRMS.

Mr. Mallock asked the Under-Secretary of State for India what number of officers belonging to the Public Works Department in India were now in the employment of private companies or private persons in whose undertakings the Indian Government had no pecuniary interest.

Sir J. Gorst: Twenty-eight. Of these 22 were employed in Native States, mostly in connection with railways, and six we lent to the Government of Egypt.

MAY 15.

THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY.

Sir R. TEMPLE asked the Under-Secretary for India whether

Sir R. IEMPLE asked the Under-secretary for India Whether the Government of India had lately proposed to dismember the Bombay Presidency, by annexing Scinde to the Punjab?

Sir J. Gorst: No such proposal has been submitted to the Secretary of State. The Secretary of State is aware that a correspondence on the subject is going on between the Government of Bombay and the Government of India but no such ment of Bombay and the Government of India, but no such change could be made without the sanction of the Government of India. There is at present no correspondence to lay worn the table. upon the table.

THE CONTAGIOUS DISEASES ACTS IN INDIA.

Mr. STUART asked whether Her Majesty's Government was prepared to make any representation to the Government of India with a view to securing the repeal of the Contagious Diseases Acts in that country.

Sir J. Gorst: The power of repealing Acts of the Indian Legislature is vested by Act 24th and 25th Vic., c. 67, in the Country of the Country Country for making Jawa and Born. Council of the Governor-General for making Laws and Regulations. The Government have no intention of interfering, nor have they the power to interfere with the discretion of that body in making, repealing, or amending laws. The directions given to the Government of India as to the regulations to be framed under the Cantonment Act will be found in the despatch which I have laid on the table.

Mr. STUART asked whether the House was to understand, from the hon gentleman's reply, that the Government, while condemning certain regulations as immoral and ordering their removal, were unwilling to take any steps for removing that legislation which authorized them, and in some cases encouraged them.

Sir J. Gorst: The Legislature having intrusted a particular body in India with the duty of making and amending the laws, it would be highly unbecoming of Her Majesty's Government to interfere with them.

Mr. Stansfeld: Does the hon. gentleman mean to assure the House that in the history of the relations of Her Majesty's Government of India there are no precedents of advice or counsel being given by the Secretary of State to the Government of India?

Sir J. Gorst: That being a question of precedent, it is only fair that I should have notice of it.

Mr. STUART: Does the right hon. gentleman know that advice was given to the Government of India by Her Majesty's Government four years ago?
Sir J. Gorst asked for notice of this question also.

Mr. STANSFELD: In consequence of the answer of the hon. gentleman, I beg to give notice that on the 5th of June, on which day my hon friend the member for the Crewe Division has obtained first place for a notice of motion, he will move a motion in favour of the repeal of the Contagious Diseases Acts, or those portions of them which authorize or encourage either the compulsory examination of women or the regulation of prostitution, and on that occasion he will undoubtedly endeavour to obtain a decision from the House. (Hear, hear.)

THE PROTECTION OF YOUNG GIRLS IN INDIA

Mr. STUART asked the Under Secretary of State for India whether a numerously-signed memorial was presented in September last to the Governor-General of India from the Ladies' Committee of the Calcutta Missionary Conference and from other women in India, praying that the protection afforded by "The Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885," to young girls under sixteen in this country might be extended to India; whether it was the case that the Governor-General had replied to that memorial, refusing its prayer; whether such protection was afforded to girls under sixteen in Russia; and whether a treaty had been concluded between this country and Russia, which came into force a year ago, by which provision was made for the extradition from India to Russia of persons accused of seducing girls under sixteen, which persons were thus liable to be delivered up from India to Russia to be there tried for what was not a crime in India itself.

Sir J. Gorst: The Secretary of State has no knowledge of the facts stated in the first two paragraphs of the question. Protection is afforded to girls under sixteen by section 373 of the Indian Penal Code. The answer to the last two paragraphs is in the affirmative, but the 18th section of the Russian Treaty provides that its stipulations "shall be applicable to the colonies and foreign possessions of Her Britanic Majesty, so far as the laws for the time being in force in such colonies and force in such colonies and foreign posssessions respectively will allow."

COMMUNICATION BETWEEN INDIA AND UPPER BURMA.

The question of a practicable route between Assam and Upper Burma, which will admit of India's new province being brought into easy communication with the Indian railway systems and with Hindostan generally, from which Burma has always been in a great measure cut off by physical barriers, has received a satisfactory solution from the recent expedition under Mr. J. F. Needham. This gentleman, known from previous successful explorations on the Indian north-east frontier, was deputed to startfrom the Assam Valley, with instructions to find a practicable route into the basin of the Irrawaddy over the Patkoi Mountains, which here hem in the curve of the Brahmaputra Valley, and have proved no small obstacle to previous travellers. So recently as 1885 Colonel Woodthorpe and Major Macgregor crossed the mountain barrier under circumstances of great hardship, and the attitude of the tribes on both sides of the dividing range gave ground for fearing that but little assistance in the supply of stores and elephants for their carriage would be given by the natives on the present occasion.

The base of operations and practical starting point of the expedition was Makum, which is the terminus of a railway extending to Sudiya, on that grand fluvial highway of India, the Brahmaputra river. Here it had been proposed to intrust the carriage of the stores to coolies, who would march along the banks of the Dehing and Namphuk rivers and then over the Patkoi range. Besides Mr. Needham, the political officer, there was Captain Michell, of the Intelligence branch, as well as Mr. Ogle, of the Survey of India Department, a gentleman who was the surveyor in Colonel Woodthorpe's expedition of 1885, and who was acquainted with the region, a detachment of fifty Goorkhas, 100 coolies, and five military elephants were also attached to the party. Unfortunately the local coolies, who should have met the party at Makum, were not forthcoming, and the stores had to be conveyed up the Dehing in boats, a course which led to much difficulty and delay. Eventually on January 12 the party succeeded in uniting at Nimrong, on the Namphuk river, but here the twelve elephants promised for the further the Brahmaputra river. Here it had been proposed to intrust river, but here the twelve elephants promised for the further advance were missing, and a division of the party became necessary; consequently, Captain Michell, with seventeen fighting men and five elephants, pushed on, with the object of meeting the Burmese exploration party, which were expected to advance from the civil station at Mogoung, on the Irra-

The march over the mountains proved difficult, on account of the incessant rain, the necessity of feeling one's way without guides, and the hard work involved in cutting the brushwood to enable the elephants to pass; but the important fact was elicited that the gradients were comparatively easy. The rise from Nimrong (920ft.) to the top of the pass over the Patkoi Mountains (4,200ft.) was very gradual, and is spread over thirty miles, while the descent into Upper Burma on the other side is much the same. Unfortunately the Indian expedition were unable to effect a junction with the party from Mogoung, under Captain Driscott and Major Adamson, else a continuous survey of the entire route might have been produced. The journey accomplished, however, corroborates beyond doubt the arguments of Mr. Holt Hallett and others, that by this route facility of road and even railway communication between Assam and Burma may be reasonably anticipated, a measure that, without doubt, would help much to consolidate and develop our new province of Upper Burma.

THE CONFESSIONS OF A DACOIT.

A Calcuita paper writes:—There are those who entertain a half belief that, in respect of crime and corruption, the Native States are not as black as they are painted. After the fashion of "Rasselas" we would invite all such to listen to the fashion of "Rasselas" we would invite all such to listen to the tale of Damodhar Punt, at once a trusted official of Gwalior under the late Maharajah, and a daring organiser of wholesale robberies throughout the Central India States. Damodhar Punt was the tahsildar of the Neori Pargana, and he kept in his service a band of dacoits over one hundred strong to commit dacoity in neighbouring jurisdictions on condition of preserving the peace within his own pargana. He was even trully convicted principally on the widered of one Muthre tually convicted, principally on the evidence of one Muthra Singh, an approver, whose evidence was corroborated, however, singh, an approver, whose evidence was corroborated, nowever, by an overwhelming mass of independent testimony. Muthra Singh had been appointed leader of the dacoits, and he described the arrangements as follows:—"As my courage was proved in these fights, and they wanted a leader to represent the pargana officials and see that the pargana got its proper dues—i.e., one-fourth of all proceeds of robberies—I was appointed. I at once took up the leadership, and for about five years committed decoities in many districts and gave the years committed dacoities in many districts, and gave the chout regularly. I used to get five per cent. myself; my total receipts on this account and in two shares were Rs. 27,000, and the chout I gave amounted to Rs. 42,000, paid to the Foujdar Salim Singh. The amount plundered by this one dacoit and Salim Singh. The amount plundered by this one dacoit and his band must then have been one lakh and sixty-eight thousand rupees. The Foujdar with whom Muthra Singh lodged his booty attempted to cheat him out of his share, and he says:—
"I, after duly warning the officials, began to plunder Gwalior villages, and looted Pipulra of Rs. 22,000 or Rs. 23,000 worth of property." He was then, for the first time, traced and captured through the treachery of the local officials, who were afraid to shelter him any longer and wanted to cheat him out tured through the treachery of the local officials, who were afraid to shelter him any longer, and wanted to cheat him out of his share of the booty. Being asked whether the prisoners had committed any other dacoities to his knowledge, he replied:

—'No; but what else do they live on but dacoities? They have never cultivated. They, as Moghyas, were brought up to the profession of dacoity. As long as I was a leader of dacoits I never knew a Moghya refuse to join a dacoit party to which he was nominated by his own jemadar. I used to give the jemadar notice of the proposed date of starting on an expedition. I always went on big expeditions and used to return with Rs. 25,000 worth of plunder on occasions. Every Moghyar of Neori pargana was at my disposal. I will undertake to take any officer you may appoint to the pargana of Neori and point out and prove seven or eight murders that occurred there, point out and prove seven or eight murders that occurred there, point out and prove seven or eight murders that occurred there, and the proofs of which were brought up before Damodhar Punt, Kamasdar, who never reported them; in fact, it is well known that the price of a life in that pargana under Damodhar Punt is only Rs. 100. He always charged that amount unless the murderer could bear squeezing." This is not a page from Meadow Taylor's sensational novel, "The Confessions of a Thug," but the plain parrative of a case reported by Colonel a Thug," but the plain narrative of a case reported by Colonel Kincaid in his last report. And there is good reason to believe that Damodhar Punt is a familiar type in the Native States—at least in those of Central India.

BURMESE WOMEN.

The Indian world has hitherto been under the belief, fostered to some extent by travellers' tales, that the Burmese women are pretty. Major E. C. Browne, in the "Coming of the Great Queen," says something very different. Thus:

A more cheery little body is not to be met with on earth,

A more cheery little body is not to be met with on earth, but as to her store of that highly-prized, and as some consider, indispensable attribute of her sex—beauty—she has none on't. Her height is 4 feet 6 inches, or thereabouts; she has a bad figure as a rule, with square shoulders, flat breast, angular hips. Her nose is flat, her eyes narrow, her mouth large, her complexion muddy. Her movements are ungraceful; she waddles like a duck as she walks. Thus far great mother Nature has been unkind to her; but she possesses ample masses of black hair, always carefully oiled and dressed, which she loves to adorn with roses and orchids; she has a sunny smile, and to those who understand her language, a boundless flow of conversation. She is an admirable housewife; fertile of resource, economical, thrifty; a great bargainer and barterer; clean and tidy in her ways, and, even in the too many cases, alas! when she knows full well that she is only a temporary holder of her lord's affections, loyal and faithful in her conduct. But even when cast off she is by no means cast down. A little money to start a little fruit or zigar stall at the market, or in default of this petty barterings in the bazaar seems to make her quite happy and contented. Every mother understands that this will probably be the fate of her female offspring; so from earliest youth they are taught business, the parent often leaving the child entirely alone to run the little stall, while she watches from a distance to see that all goes well.

Like all womankind, the Burmese woman has a weakness for dress. She loves to decorate her body and to look as well she can. Her dress is remarkable for its simplicity, consisting, on ordinary occasions, of a square piece of cotton or silk tied round the waist, and folded tightly across the breast. It is open more or less in front so that as she walks she exposes one of her legs to halfway up the thigh. Some of the richer and smarter women wear an outer dress, which is more decent, and put a silk handkerchief round their necks. Her feet, when she can possibly afford it, are sandalled. It is considered as a great indelicacy for an unmarried woman to expose any portion of her breast, and so particular are they in this regard, that by drawing the dress tightly across the bosom in early womanhood the figure is permanently spoilt.

The Burmese girl is carefully nurtured and watched by her mother up to a certain age; she is then sold to the highest bidder, possibly a friend or relation in the same village—possibly a complete stranger. In theory the man thus brings the dower and comes to live in his father-in-law's house; but of course this is not carried out in practise, as a man with several daughters would soon have to increase his accommodation. The truth is, there is little real affection from our high-toned point of view between mother and daughter. The old Burmese woman is as hard in soul as she is parched in body, and whatever affections she may have possessed are dried up at five and-forty.

A "SHAREHOLDER" writes to a financial contemporary:—
"The holders of Indian Mining Shares seem to be under the influence of a genuine panic, as one and all show a serious decline. Surely this indiscriminate selling is senseless. Because one mine requires fresh capital, this is no reason why the value of another possessing ample working capital should be depreciated. The Shares of the Nundydroog Mine are actually quoted at a discount, notwithstanding the fact that it was recently reconstructed on a satisfactory basis, and is producing a considerable amount of gold. If there is any mine in the Colar field whose future seems to be assured, it is the Nundydroog. The lode at the bottom of Webb's shaft is 4 feet wide, rich and strong, and everything points to the mine becoming, in the words of Capt. Plummer, 'deep and profitable.' I am sure that those who are sacrificing their shares now will regret their folly in a few months' time, when the rock drills are fairly at work."

A FASHIONABLE WEDDING IN INDIA.—The Lahore newspaper gives the following account of the marriage of the Maharajah of Puttiala:—"From early morning the windows and balconies were filled, and the roads were lined with crowds of eager spectators. At about half-past seven o'clock the Maharajah, seated on a moving throne (a beautiful vehicle, constructed for the occasion, and drawn by two elephants), proceeded towards Sanaur, where the wedding was to take place the same evening. President Sir Dawa Singh rode alongside his Highness on a splendid horse, with rich trappings, and the officials of the State followed on elephants, according to rank. The cavalry and infantry, drawn up at suitable places on the road, presented arms as the procession passed. The Maharajah wore his rich wedding dress, which was conspicuous not so much for the famous aigrette of diamonds and other historical jewels as for the string of pearls, called sehra, hanging down from his turban, and glittering in the rays of the sun. The scene was an imposing one. What with the booming of salute guns and the beating of tomtoms the noise was deafening. The elephants, with gold and silver howdahs, horsemen, and State palanquins came in regular succession, and were followed by a regimental band of pipers, who played on their instruments music adapted for the native ear. On the arrival of the party at a point about midway his Highness was met by the people of the bride's party. After the presentations the Maharajah, mounted on a gorgeously caparisoned elephant, and accompanied by his chief minister and high officials, went on to Sanaur. Here separate camps had been prepared for the Maharajahs of Jhind, Nabbha, and Dholepore. At night each camp was brilliantly illuminated. At night the ceremony called pheras, or 'the marching round the fire,' was performed at the temporary residence of the bride. The guests were entertained for three consecutive nights, and the Maharajah held a durbar in honour of the occasion

BUDA-PESTH, HUNGARY .-- The English visitor to the beauti-BUDA-FESTH, HUNGARY.—The English visitor to the beautiful metropolis of Hungary cannot fail to be impressed with the variety of its natural aperient waters. A short distance from Buda-Pesth is the Æsculap Spring, situated in the centre of a large plain, the aperient water from which has for many years been celebrated for the valuable medicinal properties. which it contains; the sulphates of sodium and magnesium, according to the analysis of Professor Johann Molnars, being greater in quality than those of any other natural aperient water hitherto discovered. Æsculap water being almost "tasteless," it is invaluable for women and children, and in all cases where a safe, certain, and pleasant aperient is required. It has also been found to be the most suitable aperient for the control of the prolonged use, and is of especial value in all affections of the stomach, liver, and kidneys. The leading physicians invariably prescribe Æsculap in all complaints for which aperient waters are necessary, and it is to be obtained of all chemists. The Lancet says:—"This water contains the sulphates of mag-Lancet says:—"Ins water contains the sulphates of magnesium and sodium in unusually large quantities. It is an admirable aperient water—one of the most powerful, indeed, that we have examined, and may be used with perfect confidence." INDIAN GOLD MINING SHARES.—The only change in these Shares on Saturday was an advance of $\frac{1}{2}$ in Mysore, the prospects of which are considered by good judges to be better than is generally believed. Mysore Shares were last quoted 2 11-16 to 2 13-16, Nundydroog 1 to 1\frac{1}{2}$, Indian Consolidated 6s. 6d. to 7s. 6d., Balaghat-Mysore (15s. paid) 7s. to 8s., ditto fully paid (£1) 11s. to 12s., Ooregum 12s. to 13s., ditto Preference 12s. to 13s., Devala-Moyar 5s. 6d. to 6s. 6d., Nine Reefs 13s. to 15s., Mysore Reefs (£1 paid) 3s. 3d. to 3s. 9d., Mysore-Wynaad (17s. 6d. paid) 2s. to 3s., Indian Glenrock 3s. 6d. to 4s. 6d., Gold Fields of Mysore 13-16 to 15-16, New South-East Wynaad 3s. to 4s., Indian Glemines (of Glasgow) 5s. to 6s., Wentworth (17s. paid) 5s. to 7s., Wynaad Perseverance 2s. to 3s., and Mysore West (fully paid) 3s. to 4s.

7s., Wynaad Perseverance 2s. to 3s., and Mysore West (fully paid) 3s. to 4s.

The chief value and special interest pertaining to the Second Series of "Distinguished Anglo-Indians" will consist in, unlike the First Series, nearly all the matter being new; and in the majority of the sketches relating to Anglo-Indian statesmen and military officers being of those who have only recently passed away, or are now living. The all-engrossing question of Education in India having, from the controversies occasioned, been so prominently forced into public notice, makes the present an opportune time for publication, entire, of Lord Macaulay's Great Minute, which his numerous admirers will, doubtless, like to read; and only a very small portion of which has been published in the biography of his lordship, although it is nearly as brilliant as some of the famous Essays. There is also some interesting matter regarding the "Great Minute," never before published, in addition to extracts from "Unpublished Minutes" by Lord Macaulay, of which only a few are given in the admirable and popular biography by Sir George Trevelyan. In addition to, from its variety (including Anglo-Indian anecdotes), the book furnishing plenty of entertainment, these "Extracts," with the "Great Minute" in full, now make generally public, for the first time, some writings of Lord Macaulay, as every one knows, one of the most interesting and popular authors of his own or any other age. Anything by Lord Macaulay is sure to interest the British public. To the Second Series, as to the First, there is a copious index of names for ready reference. There is also (as frontispiece) a capital portrait of Colonel Malleson, C.S.I., in Colonel Laurie's opinion, the most fitting successor of Sir John Kaye in Anglo-Indian literature.

SIR J. P. HENNESSY'S LIBEL CASE.—The action for libel brought by Sir John Pope Hennessy, Governor of the Mauritius, against The Times, to recover damages for the publication of statements charging Times, to recover damages for the publication of statements charging him with cooking reports of speeches made by members of the Governing Council of the Mauritius before sending them home to the Secretary of State, was again before a Divisional Court of Queen's Bench on the 17th inst., on a motion for discovery of documents. The Times asks for inspection of certain copies of despatches and letters to the Secretary of State, which are admitted by the plaintiff to be in his custody; but, in his affidavit, he says the Secretary of State objects to his producing them.—Mr. Lockwood contended that the documents did not really belong to the plaintiff; but, though they were in his custody, they were at the direction of the Secretary of State, who said they should not be produced.—Mr. Justice Field: What right has he to interfere? Sir John Pope Hennessy is not a servant of the Secretary of State. (Laughter.) The contention on the other side was that, as there was no affidavit from the Secretary of State to the effect that the publication would be injurious to the interests of the public service, the plaintiff was bound to produce the documents.—Mr. Justice Field said they should take further time to consider the points of law involved, and the decision will accordingly stand over till next term.

NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE ESTABLISHED 1933

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staft of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Iuventions. Inventions.

Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its corre-pondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

INDIA.

There are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTRLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian veople.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native vess. The Indian people are naturally doctle and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordiagly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

THE CALCUTTA REVIEW.

ESTABLISHED 1844.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it... there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—£tateswan, October 1886.

. . . The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done for more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name —J. W. KAYE, Athenæum Club, June 23 1872.

The Calcutta R view has given us valuable articles on the army. Son e from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophesy, of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.— Address of the C.-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

... The Calcutta Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its wel-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westmineter Review.

Wanted agents, at home and abroad, to obtain orders for watches and jewellery on our new instalment system, by weekly or monthly payments. Most beneficial to subscribers and agents, as money paid for rent of showy shops and shopmen are thus saved to members joining our instalment system. Also trustworthy men wanted in every ship, regiment, and battery to act as agents, to enable naval and military men to secure good, reliable watches at a small profit above the actual cost.

Naval and military sgents when leaving the service, desirous of being appointed district agents or travellers, are invited to apply for the post. Means of earning a good income were never before placed so easily in the reach of intelligent, energetic naval or military men leaving the service. Terms on application.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, MAY 28, 1888.

General Intelligence.

BY OVERLAND MAIL.

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 11th May; from Allahabad and Madras to the 9th May; and from Calcutta to the 8th May.

THE Viceroy, the Commander-in-Chief, and all the officials who make the annual exodus from Calcutta are at Simla, but that station has been suffering from winds of extraordinary violence; and when the mail left the weather there was reported as being "cold, gloomy, blustering, and unseasonable."

THE weather during the first week in May was very boisterous throughout India. A terrific storm visited Moradabad, killing 250 people and about 1,700 cattle, besides doing great injury to crops, buildings, and property generally.

THE Nawab Mehdi Ali, Financial Secretary to the Hyderabad Government, left Bombay by the mail steamer of May 11th for England to give evidence before the Select Committee of the House of Commons regarding the Hyderabad (Deccan) scandal.

THE rumour that Abdul Huq was to visit England for the same purpose also is contradicted. He has, it is said, only got as far as Secunderabad to consult counsel.

THE Bishop of Bombay takes leave to England, and was expected to take his passage in the steamer of May 18th.

H.M.S. "BACCHANTE," with Admiral Freemantle on board, left Bombay on May 8th for Colombo, Trincomalee, and the Mauritius. The Admiral will transfer his flag to the Boadicea, and proceed to Zanzibar and Madagascar, returning to Bombay in November.

Domestic arrangements permitting, the Gaekwar of Baroda will leave Bombay for Genoa in the Italian mail steamer sailing June 20th.

THE inquiry which is being conducted by the Local Administrations into the poverty of the masses of India, particularly in agricultural tracts, is being made as expeditiously as possible. The Government of India has asked that the replies of the Local Governments be forwarded punctually by June 1st, as "the Viceroy, who desires to deal personally with the subject, will leave India earlier than was anticipated."

LIEUTENANT R. WILLIAMSON, of the Munster Fusiliers, and Mr. O Dowda, of the Kyoukse Police, were killed on May 5th, at Sepagin, in an affair with Upper Burma dacoits. A private in Lieut. Williamson's regiment was also killed, and others wounded. The two officers, and their party of some twenty men, were in pursuit of a gang of marauders, and fell into an ambuscade.

ANOTHER encounter of some consequence took place in Burma. A strong body of Kachins had carried a village close to Mogoung, and established themselves behind a strong stockade in the hills adjoining. Out of this they were driven by a force of military police and mounted infantry, who disposed of no less than forty killed and wounded, besides prisoners. There was no loss on our side, except in some ponies of the mounted infantry.

Boh Toke, who was looked upon as the chief leader of dacoits to the south of Mandalay, was killed by a party of mounted infantry under Major Sir Bartle Frere, of the Rifle Brigade, in the Myingyan district on May 4th.

Mr. Barrington Browne, the geologist sent by the Secretary of State to look over the Burma ruby mines, has left Simla for England, after placing the Government of India in possession of the results of his survey of the mineral wealth of Upper Burma.

THE Maharajah of Cashmere has been appointed Honorary Colonel of the 37th Bengal Infantry. The Raja of Lambargaon has been attached to the same regiment.

HIS HIGHNESS THE MAHARAJA HOLKAR has contributed Rs. 300 to the Fawcett Memorial Fund.

Four thousand Chins, led by an Alompra Prince, have raided into Kubo Valley. Kale Sawbwa was captured and carried off to the hills. General Low has organised an expedition to retake Indin, and reinforcements have been sent from Mandalay to Chindwin to the number of 800 men, two guns, and 200 mounted infantry.

THE Akyab disturbances have been suppressed.

THE friendly Karens in the Tavoy district have been attacked and several killed. The loyal Karens are not to be disarmed.

THE Amir of Kabul has returned to his capital.

THE mutiny at the Madras College ended on the 5th inst., most of the students returning. The boy whose conversion was feared has returned to his home in the charge of his parents.

MR. DALGLEISH'S last letters are dated Leh, 20th March. He was then well and in good spirits, anticipating no danger.

THE present meteorological conditions are not considered favourable to an early commencement of the monsoon rains, and even suggest the fear that they may be delayed.

THE conversion of the Nagpore-Chatisgurh State Railway from metre gauge to broad is being rapidly carried out by the engineers of the Bengal-Nagpore Railway Company. The rails on the standard gauge have now been laid five miles beyond Raipore, thus enabling the material trains to work along nearly 200 miles of the line.

Two men, Khan Mahomed and his son, Chirag Din, have been committed for trial by the District Magistrate, Ferozepore, for shooting the Nawab of Mamdote.

THE Gilgit campaign of the Cashmere troops is not over yet. Forces are still being despatched from Srinagar to punish the rebels; and it has been announced to the Cashmere troops that further reinforcements will be sent up at once, if necessary, under Raja Ram Singh, or even his Highness himself.

THE Indian Marine steamer Tenasserim, which left on the 1st inst. with troops for Rangoon, broke down just outside, and had to put back. After being patched up she is to come to Bombay and thence to England, to be fitted with new engines.

As the result of inquiries regarding the alleged diminution of the transit trade from Kabul to Bokhara, owing to the imposition of excessive duties by the Amir on Indian goods passing through Afghanistan, it appears that there is no ground for the report that merchants trading between Hindustan and Central Asia are forwarding their goods to Bokhara via Bombay and Moscow.

CHOLERA is increasing in Cashmere.

CHOLERA is still prevalent in Upper Burma.

GANGA SAHAI, a notorious dacoit leader, has been captured near Meerut.

THE Parsee cricket team left Bombay for England by the Austro-Hungarian Lloyd's steamer Poseidon.

A SPECIAL Court of Inquiry assembles at Calcutta to investigate the circumstances attending the loss of the Continental.

THE Nawab of Cambay has abolished imposts on trade and industries in his State.

THE Nawab Bahadur of Murshidabad lost the medal and the sanad of his much-prized Order of Knight of the Indian Empire, along with other valuables, during the recent conflagration in that city.

Dr. A. McM. Patterson, of the 31st Punjab Infantry, met with a serious accident on the polo ground at Delhi. He was thrown from his pony and severely cut about the face and hands. He is doing well, however.

REPORTS from Nepal state that the Tibetans intend at last making a demonstration in force, having really got together a sort of army in the Chumbi valley. Of the truth of this news there are no present means of forming an opinion. Supplies have been ordered for the whole Sikkim Field Force to the end of June; and the Pioneers, who are likely to remain until the matter is finally settled, will be rationed to the end of the rains.

GENERAL MACFARLANE, commanding at Umballa, succeeds to the command at Quetta.

THE rumour that a Camp of Exercise was to be held at Delhi next cold season is unfounded.

In the year 1886-87 there were 89 cotton mills at work in India, containing 16,786 looms and 2,190,376 spindles.

THEY employed an average daily number of 72,169 persons, and consumed 264 million pounds of cotton.

FORTY per cent. of the entire male population of India are engaged in agriculture.

THE accounts of 1887-88 promise to be better than the Revised Estimates by Rs.2,00,000, or Rs.3,00,000 at least

THE Calcutta Arya Somaj have offered a prize of Rs.5,000 to anyone who can prove that idolatry in India has "emanated from the Vedas."

The total estimated cost of the new Viceregal Palace at Simla is twelve lakhs of rupees.

It is reported that there is a deficiency of Rs.20,000 in the Treasury at Srinagar. Two duftries and the treasurer are in custody. A strict investigation is being made, and it is believed that some curious disclosures will take place.

NAWAB MAHDI HASSAN has been appointed temporary Director of both the Nizam's Railway Company and Mining Company, vice Abdul Huq, suspended.

COLONEL MARSHALL, Private Secretary to the Nizam, is said to meditate taking two months' leave.

A MAHOMEDAN has been arrested in Delhi who claims to be the rightful ruler of India. He has been delivering seditious addresses, and endeavouring thereby to incite his co-religionists to aid him in recovering the sovereignty which he says the British Government have usurped.

On Monday afternoon, May 7, the team of Parsee Cricketers Icft Bombay for Europe by the Austro-Hungarian Lloyd's steamer Poseidon, when a few friends and relatives of the cricketers assembled at the Apollo Bunder to see them off and wish them success. The team will visit Trieste, Venice, and Paris, arriving at London on the 1st of next month. They are expected to return to Bombay in about six months.

NOTES.

THE latest news from India will be found in the telegrams from the Calcutta correspondent of the Times, which we reproduce in another column. Matters are still very unsettled in Upper Burma, and we have not yet got over the Sikkim difficulty. Lord Dufferin is evidently destined to leave some troublesome legacies to his successor.

The rumour is again abroad in India that Lord Dufferin will leave the country earlier than was anticipated. This rumour was contradicted when it first appeared, and the Pioneer stated, on what appeared to be "authority," that his Excellency would remain till December, visiting Cashmere in the autumn. The belief that this arrangement has been upset is founded, apparently, upon a circular issued to the local administrations calling for certain Reports to be sent in to the Government of India by June 1st, so as to receive the Viceroy's personal attention before he leaves India. But it may be that his Excellency, having now some experience of the dilatory way in which Reports are forwarded by district officers, has merely caused a memorandum to be issued to the local governments with a view of expediting matters.

It is to be hoped that the proposed visit to Cashmere will be made, so that Lord Dufferin may see with his own eyes and hear with his own ears the state of the unhappy Valley which is now being scourged by cholera and misgovernment. The Native Press seems to have made up its mind that the British intend to annex Cashmere, and, strange to say, the idea finds favour with the editors of the vernacular papers. It is said now that Lord Lytton was very anxious to annex Cashmere, and would have done so only he preferred a war with Afghanistan to begin with, and had not time to carry out the other project. The country of Lalla Rookh being annexed by "Owen Meredith," would, indeed, have been a poetic idea.

It is said, however, that, although the people of Cashmere are ready and willing to be "annexed," the Maharaja would prefer selling them and their country to the British for a substantial sum down, he to retain his rights of sovereignty under a British protectorate. If such an arrangement could be carried out it would be a blessing to the unfortunate inhabitants and a strengthening of a frontier which is now particularly weak, and which would cause the military authorities in India considerable anxiety in case of trouble with our Russian friends. In the meantime compliments are the order of the day, and the Maharaja of Cashmere has been gazetted as honorary colonel of the 37th Bengal Infantry, an honour which, we trust, that regiment appreciates.

THE good people who send round the hat or the begging box for all manner of schemes at home have been slow in invading India as a recruiting ground for subscriptions or donations. But they have done so at last, and we rejoice to see that they have been promptly snubbed by the Indian Government, who very properly consider that "it would not be expedient to place before the Native Princes of India solicitations for aid to charitable funds in Great Britain." Quite right. It would never do to allow the "saints" to join the "sinners" in extracting coin from a Native nobleman. "One at a time" is a fair-play maxim, and at present the lead is with the stockbrokers and their friends.

OF course, the mail papers continue to be filled with comments, letters, and telegrams regarding the Hyderabad (Deccan) business. But the Pioneer, which first commenced the agitation, complains that matters are getting a little mixed. It says:—"The information in regard to Mr.

Watson's abandonment of Abdul Huq, which the Calcutta correspondent of the Times telegraphed home, and which our London correspondent telegraphs thence to us, is a réchauffé of what has already appeared in these columns." To have one's own news telegraphed back as original information must be not annoying only, but expensive.

THE Pioneer is naturally irritated, and vents not a little of its irritation on Mr. Watson, whose explanation it does not think helps him much. "He concerned himself actively in a bogus transaction, by which a fictitious value was to be secured for certain shares of which he was a large holder; and whether he sold these to the Nizam or to other people after their value had thus been enhanced at the expense of the Nizam is of little importance. So far, and notwithstanding Mr. Watson's unhandsome betrayal of his confederate, the public will insist in regarding Cæsar and Pompey as very much alike, especially Pompey."

So far the Pioneer is virtuously indignant, but the Statesman will not believe in the virtue, and says that "it is incredible that the Pioneer, which has been the prop and mainstay of the Hyderabad Residency for years, should be in such haste to quit the sinking ship," for the Calcutta journal declares that its Allahabad contemporary has been "the noisy supporter or lofty apologist of every prominent scandal which has occurred in Hyderabad for the last five years." And that is saying a great deal.

THE Bombay Gazette having taken upon itself to identify and criticise Sir Lepel Griffin as the author of the article in the Pioneer which we referred to last week, the latter journal calls its Western contemporary to task for a "gross offence against the proprieties of journalism," and adds, "We desire distinctly to state that the leader in question was written without any official having been privy to its appearance from first to last or in any shape or way."

THE new Viceregal Palace at Simla will cost, says an up-country paper, an enormous sum, over Rs. 8,50,000, the furniture Rs. 2,00,000, and the outlay on lighting the building by electricity will probably absorb a lakh and a-half of rupees more. The total estimated outlay is, therefore, Rs. 12,00,000, but, as the Public Works Department never built anything without exceeding the estimate, Rs. 13,00,000 will most likely be about the figure.

THE Committee of the Bombay Institution for Deaf Mutes beg thankfully to acknowledge the receipt of Rs. 500, the generous donation of the Nawab Ahsunallah Khan Bahadur, Dacca, to the funds of the institution.

THE Maharaja of Jeypore is leading a life of retirement. His contribution of a lakh of rupees to the Lady Dufferin Fund brought him the addition of an extra two guns to his personal salute with a G.C.S.I., and this was all he desired. He does not care how the world revolves as long as he is happy.

No further attempts have been made to renew the fires in any of the buildings in the Murree Depôt since the 17th ult. Extraordinary precautions have been taken. In addition to the soldiers patrolling the barracks all day and all night, the chowkidars have been doubled on each vacant barracks, and night has been made hideous by the shouts of these men; as they are ordered to keep up constant communication with each other, and also to let the authorities know they are awake. They are visited at uncertain times every night by the Barrack Sergeant, by which means they are kept alert and watchful.

There are now at least three offers before the Secretary of State for the construction of a railway between Kalka and Umballa. Of the two rival offers which contemplate carrying the line downwards from Umballa by Kurnal to Delhi, the promoters of which ask for no Government help, the public know already. The less-known project put forward by Messrs. Mackinnon, Mackenzie and Co., for a line to Umballa only, stipulates, among other and minor conditions, for a bonus for one year about equal to the sum required to pay interest on the capital employed whilst the line is under construction. However the merits of these proposals may be finally adjudged, the public may be certain of making the worst part of the journey to the foot of the Simla hills by railway within a couple of years.

INDIA.

CALCUTTA, MAY 27.

The Queen's birthday was celebrated throughout India by parades and salutes. At Ootacamund the Queen's portrait was unveiled by the Governor. In the course of his speech he said that he would not recapitulate the glories of Her Majesty's reign, already described by orators and brilliant writers, but would observe that no individual had increased its happiness and usefulness more than Prince Albert by the stimulus which he had given to art and commerce by the Exhibition of 1851. However, this day the virtues of the Queen most claimed their attention. By her journals she had taken the people into her confidence, and they knew the wife, mother, and Queen who was working ever for her subjects. The Ministers and others who saw most of Her Majesty knew best her devotion to duty and to her people. This was lately exemplified in her visit to Germany, Austria, and Italy, the effect of which visit would doubtless be to relax to a great extent the political tension and to give great comfort to the suffering Emperor Frederick, whose fortitude all Europe prayed might be rewarded with recovery. This errand of mercy was the fitting symbol of a life devoted to public duty, domestic affection, and sympathy with human suffering.

ntting symbol of a life devoted to public duty, domestic affection, and sympathy with human suffering.

The correspondence urging a repeal of the duties on Indian silver-ware is published. A despatch of February 9 contains the following indignant remonstrance from the Indian Government and accurately interprets public feeling in India on this subject:—

"We greatly regret to learn that the Treasury does not propose to take action on our representations. In the earlier stage of this correspondence we were informed that there was a difficulty in connection with drawbacks. When we pointed out that such a consideration should not interfere with the proper treatment of the case we were informed that financial difficulties stood in the way. When the financial difficulties disappeared we were told that a legal difficulty, the nature of which has not been mentioned, had arisen. In an enclosure of your lordship's present letter we are informed, without any reason being assigned, that the Chancellor of the Exchequer is not prepared to alter the duties.

"We venture to represent to your lordship that the tone of the letter from the Goldsmiths' Company and the decision thereon of the Treasury cannot but create an impression that the present system is maintained solely in the interests of that

"We venture to represent to your lordship that the tone of the letter from the Goldsmiths' Company and the decision thereon of the Treasury cannot but create an impression that the present system is maintained solely in the interests of that company and those whom it represents. We would urge that India, which has given up nearly a million in cotton duties, on the ground that they protected native industry against English; has some claim upon England for reciprocity on its part, in permitting free competition between foreign and native manufacturers."

A severe epidemic of cholera has broken out at Ahmedabad. Three hundred fatal cases were registered during last week, including Europeans. This is one of the municipalities which the Bombay Government had to rebuke recently for the neglect of proper sanitary measures. From the Madras Presidency we receive the like complaints of the total unfitness of extensive local self-government for a backward country like India. At Ganjam the President of the District Board complains that it is all but impossible ever to get a quorum. It was only with the greatest difficulty, and after special and urgent requisitions, that he was enabled to collect a quorum to pass the budget estimates. Bengal, though more advanced in some respects, is exhibiting the same unsatisfactory results, arising from the raw haste with which Lord Ripon's system of self-government was imposed, under conditions ridiculously incongruous, upon a people penetrated with ultra-Oriental conservatism, and regarding all departures from the old-established ways and customs, either for the sake of sanitation or otherwise, as dangerous, and pregnant with mischievous consequences both in the present and the future.

BURMA.

RANGOON, MAY 26.

No news has arrived from the Pouk and Kalewa columns, which are operating against the Chins. Each has been advancing towards the prescribed objective point, and they have probably reached India and Gungaw respectively.

A fresh dacoit rising under Boh-Saya has occurred in the

A fresh dacoit rising under Boh-Saya has occurred in the Pagyee district, in lower Chindwin, near the point at which Major Kennedy and Captain Beville were killed. Troops have been despatched to the scene of the disturbance, and the Chindwin reserve of the 10th Bengal Infantry has been ordered to concentrate at Pagyee.

The work f stamping out dacoity in the Tsagain and Ava districts is being vigorously carried out. In this district Captain Knox on the 15th inst. attacked and routed a large band of dacoits, led by Boh-Palaik and Boh-Pyoo. On the 17th both these Bohs with nineteen followers with guns surrendered.

Colonel Sartorius reports from Mankine that the loyal Tsawbwa has re-entered the capital, the Karennees having evacuated the town on the advance of the troops. The column will return to Fort Stedman, but a military post will be maintained at Mone. The country has been terribly devastated by tained at Mone. The country has been terribly devastated by pillage and fire, and great scarcity of food is anticipated.

A sharp encounter between a party of police, under Inspector Thompson, and a large body of dacoits, led by Ootaya, one of Ottama's lieutenants, has occurred near Minhla. The police attacked the dacoits, who were marching south-westwards, presumably in order to unite with another large band north of Thayetmyo. Eighteen dacoits were killed, but the police had in the ord to retire as their amountion was exhausted. Thayetmyo. in the end to retire, as their ammunition was exhausted. Minhla has been garrisoned by troops from Thayetmyo, and has been added to the Lower Burma command, as the troops belonging to the Upper Burma command previously garrisoning the place were required elsewhere. A small column from The place were required elsewhere. A small column from The ayetmyo has gone in pursuit of the dacoits who were attacked by Inspector Thompson. It is suspected that they intended to reach the Arrakan force. Military police have been despatched to Sandoway, on the Arrakan coast, to attack them if they cross the mountains.

Some slight insurrectionary movements which have occurred in the ruby mines have been quelled by the military police. In Ava a village of fifty houses has been burnt by dacoits. In In Ava a village of fifty houses has been burnt by dacoits. In the Minbu, Myingyan, and Toungdwingyee districts the military police have had a series of successful encounters with the dacoits, who suffered heavily, while our loss was very slight. In Tsagain a large body of dacoits has attacked the Singo police-station, but they were driven off with loss. In the eastern division the dacoits have burnt the Seikphunoung police-station, which was occupied by Burmese policemen. So far as is known the police fled without offering any resistance. The same gang then moved to the south, and attacked another police-station, but were repulsed with loss.

From Minbuitti is reported that 700 dacoits have surrendered in the districts held by Ottama, under the terms of the Chief Commissioner's recent proclamation. This is a highly satisfactory result, although probably many of those who have surrendered are insincere, and merely wish to avoid the hard-ships of remaining in the jungle during the rainy season. If any permanent benefit is to result from these surrenders the Government must provide some employment for these men in constructing roads, or executing other public works. districts, where considerable numbers of dacoits have sur-rendered, complaints are made that no steps have been taken to provide them with employment, and that hence they have relapsed into their evil courses. These mistaken attempts to practise economy is proving very costly.

On the night of the 20th inst. 400 Kachyens, under Boh-Tee, attacked Mogoung, and succeeded in entering the town. Lieutenant O'Donnell, commanding the garrison of military police, roused by the firing, sallied from the port to attack the Kachyens, whom he believed to be outside the town, and missed them in the darkness. At daybreak Mr. O'Donnell entered the town, being received by a heavy fire from the Kachyens. A severe hand-to-hand fight ensued, the Kachyens being finally driven out with a loss of forty-nine killed.

loss amounted to eight killed and ten wounded.

SIKKIM AND TIBET.

CALCUTTA, MAY 27.

Further details have been received of the attack on the Gnatong encampment. At 5.30 A.M. large bodies of men were seen advancing on the camp from the Tukola Pass. Half way from the pass the enemy divided into two main bodies, and the one to the right advanced down the valley of the Gnatong River under cover of the ridge on which our fort is built and commenced firing on our advanced picket from the cover of the trees. After half-an-hour's heavy firing the wood was cleared by a party of the 32nd Pioneers under Colonel Bromcleared by a party of the 32nd Pioneers under Colonel Bromhead. Meanwhile, a strong body of the enemy attacked the picket on the Gnatong River 200 yards from the camp. The picket was reinforced by fifty Pioneers under Lieutenant Digan, and a severe struggle ensued, during which a body of about 300 Tibetans made a charge, but were driven back with loss, and eventually retired up the hill, leaving twenty-four dead in this spot alone. The Pioneers here lost two men billed and six wounded killed and six wounded.

The other body of the enemy, advancing from the left, occupied a thickly woodel ridge about 500 yards from the camp, and maintained a brisk fire on our force from under the shelter of rocks and fallen trees until their position was outflanked by a party of the Sherwood Foresters (Derbyshire Regiment) under Lieutenant Iggulden, who had been sent up the valley to the south of the camp. During these manœuvres a sergeant of the Derbyshire Regiment was shot through the head, and killed on the spot. On the retreat of the Tibetans nead, and killed on the spot. On the retreat of the Hoetans from this ridge a general advance took place, and the enemy retreated in swarms towards the Tukola Pass. One hundred men of the Derbyshire Regiment, under Captain Gosset, and 200 of the Pioneers, under Colonel Bromhead, were sent in pursuit. The guns, under Major Keith, made excellent practice, especially against a large body of the enemy posted on the Tukola ridge The Gring commend at 215 to The the the Tukola ridge. The firing commenced at 6.15 A.M. The attack was carried out by the Tibetans with determination and from well-selected points, but in consequence of their inferior weapons they failed to get very close to the camp. The Lieutenant-Governor was present during the engagement. The Tibetans lost between 100 and 150 men. They carried off most of the wounded, but a few prisoners have been taken, and from these the following particulars have been ascertained:—For the last fortnight between 2,000 and 3,000 men tained:—For the last fortnight between 2,000 and 3,000 men have been collected some eight miles on the other side of the Jalap Pass. On Monday peremptory orders were received to attack the camp. The Tibetan forces marched at five o'clock that evening and pressed on through the night, with the intention of making a night attack, but failed to arrive till daybreak. Most of those killed were regular soldiers, armed with matchlocks, though from the sound of the bullets it was believed that some were armed with rifles. The leaders, with a considerable following, took up what they imagined to be a safe position on a ridge about 2,400 yards distant, but a gun was brought successfully to bear upon them, and sent them at full speed down the hill, leaving some dead behind. The firing ceased at 10.30 A.M. ceased at 10.30 A.M.

The remainder of the Pioneers have been ordered up, and a forward movement will be made at once into the Chumli Valley, and thence, if necessary, into Tibet. Events have thus proved too strong for the policy of maintaining a passive attitude. Reinforcements have been ordered up from Pungle and Jelup. The Lieutenant-Governor has left for Darjeeling. There is little doubt now that his capture was the primary object of this audacious attack. It should be added that the Tibetan soldiers are said to have exhibited considerable energy

CRY OF THE CHILDREN. (Englishman.)

Among the many politico-social problems with which the Government of India will sooner or later have to grapple, there is one which is beginning to attract attention. What is to be is one which is beginning to attract attention. done for the children of Europeans in India? The depreciation of the rupee renders it imperative for all those Government servants who, under other circumstances, would have educated their children at home, not only to pass the remain der of their own lives in India, but also to avail themselves of such education as this country affords for their children. In the first instance, glance at the rising generations whose fathers served and are serving Government in these ranks of the service the pay of which is, in a debased coinage, insufficient for the education of their children in England, and the pension attaching to which renders living the rest of their days in India a necessity. It cannot be denied that, in all fairness, those who have done and are doing good service on small pay have some claim on the sympathies of Government with regard to the employment of their sons. It is, of course, presupposed that those sons are qualified by education and training for employ, ment. But the children of Europeans are on every side practically shut out from all official employment, in anything like the position to which, by their birth and training, they might fairly aspire. The Babu is cheaper, therefore the Babu must be employed. It is, however, worthy of consideration whether, they whole this meal expension of shown is good as on the whole, this employment of cheap labour is sound eco-

The present race of officers could certainly be relied upon to turn out better work were they living with their minds freed from the dreadful anxiety which must weigh on those who see nothing before their children but enlistment in the army or service before the mast. It may seem a heresy in these days of hard economy, but we think that a certain percentage of Government employment might be reserved for the sons of European Government servants. It is surely as much the duty of Government to consider the welfare of the children of those who have given their lives to the public service, and who have educated their sons by their forethought and prudence, as it is to provide for those who have been educated by the charity of the State, and whose fathers' services have been entirely devoted to amassing wealth for themselves. There is another, and not an inconsiderable class of Europeans, springing up in India, whose fathers have no claims on Government on the ground of having served the State, but who, nevertheless if only on account of their European origin, are entitled to regard. The number of these is rapidly increasing, and something will have eventually to be done to prevent them from degenerating into loafers and vagabonds. Some years ago there was fairly steady employment to be had on the railways and in the Government workshops for the children of European artisans, but the tendency now a days is to substitute natives in all directions. Of course there is always the unanswerable argument that the trouble began originally with men who came to India of their own accord, and it may be repeated that they and their children must take their chance. The threatening evil will not, however, be got rid of by any attempt to ignore it. The fact remains, that there is a large and growing class of Europeans of respectable parentage and decent education who are in search of a livelihood. One partial solution of the difficulty presents itself. The Government might draft off a certain number by the formation in India of a European scientific army corps. Such a corps, recruited from the best of the class in question, would be a solid element of strength in the Army, while, at the same time, it would tend to mitigate the evils arising from want of employment. The whole subject is one deserving of serious attention.

THE PAYMENT OF DOUBLE INCOME-TAX. (Madras Mail.)

Among the many privileges resulting to an Anglo-Indian from a residence in the East is that of contributing, while he is at home on leave, or after his retirement from India, not only to the revenue of the Government of India, but also to the revenue of Her Majesty's Government in England with respect to the income that he derives in the form of dividend, or interest, on his permanent investments in India. Last December the London solicitors of the Murree Brewery Company advised that dividend which had been docked in India for incometax was not liable to income-tax when remitted to, and expended in England. But they reckoned without the authorities of the Inland Revenue, a very lynx eyed body of men, who rise grandly superior to sentiment. Their "attention was called," they said, to a circular addressed to the shareholders of the Company, subjoining a copy of the letter of the solicitors, in which the writers stated that as shareholders of the Company resident in England were not liable to income-tax on the dividends received by them direct from India, since income-tax had already been paid by the Company in India, they need not include such dividends in their annual returns of income made in England. The Board then proceeded to point out that this information was incorrect:—

"The shareholders in question are liable as residents in the United Kingdom to the payment of income-tax in this country in respect of the income derived by them from Indian Securities, and such liability is not in any way affected by the fact that a similar charge is also imposed by the Government of India in respect of the same income. It not unfrequently happens, as in the present case, that income derived from Foreign or Colonial Securities or possessions received or paid in this country, or accruing to a resident here, is required to contribute to the revenue of the country or colony from whence it comes, but its recipient is not on that account entitled to claim immunity, in respect thereof, from the duties imposed by the laws of the United Kingdom. The double charge, in fact, arises simply because the property is of such a nature as to fall within the range of the taxation imposed by more than one Government."

The incidence of a double charge for income-tax is severe, but the charge is in itself reasonable. The Government of India is entitled to raise taxes for the purpose, inter alia, of keeping the peace, and thus enabling the Brewery Company to carry on its business; and Her Majesty's Government in England may reasonably require the shareholder of the Company living in England to spare from his income derived from India a contribution towards defraying the cost of the maintenance of peace and safety in the United Kingdom. The shareholder has two remedies in his own hands, for he can either sell his shares to escape liability to income-tax in India or return to and settle in India in order to escape liability to income-tax in England.

THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA AND CORSETS. (Pioneer.)

If the Indian Government, greatly daring, is beginning to evince a lively interest in corsets. A gentleman who has apparently devoted his life to the study of the artificial requirements of the female form divine, applied at the Indian Section of the Kensington Exhibition for a fibre which should take the place of whalebone in corset-making, and seems to have gone into ecstasies when shown the fibre taken from the leaves of the Caryotaurens, known in Bombay as the hill palm, and to all travellers in Bengal and Burma from the beauty which its tall, smooth, ringed stem and spreading crown lend to the land-scape. A council of war was forthwith held, and some one suggested that if the fibre were to be sewn in bands into the fabric of the corset the "desired object" would be obtained. There is so much delicacy about this Government phraseology that even the most fastidious female could scarcely find room to object. At all events, the ingenious manufacturer went off with a bundle of salopa, and in a few days exhibited a sample of the new patent corset bands, "expressing his utmost confidence that if he could procure a continuous supply of the fibre a large trade might be done." "These facts," say the Government of India, in a half apologetic tone, "are alluded to in the hope of awakening interest in an Indian fibre that has been much neglected." From the point of view of the tourist and the traveller with an eye to natural beauty, this awakened interest may not be an altogether unmixed blessing; a palm leaf will no longer be to them a simple palm leaf, but will contain, as Professor Tyndall would say, "all the promise and potency" of a fashionable corset; yet it would be perilous to grumble.

MY FAVOURITE JOURNAL.

(Pioneer.)

As the Scotchman explained his fondness for sheep's head on the ground that there was "a hantle of miscellawneous eating aboot it," so I plead guilty to a steady love for the varied reading I get in the Government Gazette. The stern terseness of its announcements is to me its greatest charm, and I derive an unfailing satisfaction from filling up the gaps in the narrative from my lengthened experience of men and cities. I look at the leave orders, and at once a vision rises before me of poor old Brown going home at last after his twenty years out here, and how he will drive up to what he used to call the "bijou residence" in Bedford Park, and how the still comely matron will meet him at the door, and bring up Tommy blushing in the triumph of passing for Sandhurst, and how Kitty will come forward with her pretty smile, and how the proud father will distribute the Delhi jewellery and the Maltese lace, and what a long, happy talk they will all have round the cheery fire. Or I imagine poor Jones, who crosses the sea only to find his household wrecked for ever, and the sobbing little girls in mourning; and in the spirit I watch him next day on his sad pilgrimage to lay the flowers on the grave of his beloved, while he thinks sadly that if he could only have come home last hot weather the Angel of Death might have been fought and conquered. Then I note that unhappy Robinson has got another shift, and wonder why the miserable old chap does not send in his papers and retire to the shelter of Cheltenham or Asia Minor. And so he longs to do, as he packs his battered portmanteau once more, if it were not for the Arabs he used to keep in Calcutta when he was a youngster, and the unpaid bills and the interest and the bad exchange. Soon after I see Smith gazetted to be Political Agent of the tenth class, vice Robinson, deceased; and thus ends the tragedy of his life. I see, too, that Tomkins goes as Deputy Commissioner to Bayaban, and I wonder how he will get on without his whist and "snooker," and what on earth will become o

Catholic as are my own literary tastes I often wonder who are the people who take an interest in some parts of this, my favourite journal. Happy is the man who, like myself, can enjoy the pleasure of reading by the light of a wise experience the comedies and the tragedies, the laughter and the tears which lie hid between its lines. But what chord with its wistful vox humana waits ready for the touch of the master's hand behind the crude statistics which crowd its pages? Can it be that anxious shareholders scan the railway traffic returns and watch with calm satisfaction the rise of so many decimals of a ton of salt or kerosine, and sigh over a fall in "jinjili" and "niger," of the nature and qualities of which valuable commodities I must admit myself hopelessly ignorant? The only heading which has much interest for me just now is "Provisions," which I regret to see are divided only into "ghi," "dried fruits and nuts," and "others;" and I cannot help thinking that it would be at once entertaining and exhilarating if we had some figures regarding "dry Monopole" and pate de foie gras;" but these are, perhaps, commodities which, as the Babus say, "do not easily lend themselves to statistical treatment." So I go on to look grimly at that ghastly page where the Accountant-General posts people who dont send up their nukshas in time, and I begin to wonder in a hazy way, does he ever get a reminder himself, and is there any higher magnate who calls on him for explanations of this, that and the other, and what a good time I would have if I could only "preaudit" my own pay bills. And then I try to fancy what kind of man he would be in private life. Does he send objection statements to his wife, and does he spend his spare time checking her hisabs; or does he ever marry at all, or do blushing maidens shun his wooing as they do a dentist?

Then a sudden critical fit comes over me, and I begin to think whether, after all, my pet journal could not be improved

Then a sudden critical fit comes over me, and I begin to think whether, after all, my pet journal could not be improved in some respects. I read in June that my poor friend Imperunious reverted from 9th to 10th grade something last December, and I see as if in a dream how the wretched man has been drawing and joyfully spending the higher rank allowances ever since; and lo! down cometh Atropos with her deadly shears and cuts off a whole month's allowances at a stroke. How ever will he pay his bills, and how he wishes he had never ordered that piano for his wife, and how on earth now are she and the babies to go to Sirmoorie? So I go on speculating whether people should be allowed to draw as it were in advance, and whether it would not be possible somehow to grease the wheels of the great lumbering Departmental Coach a little and -avoid all this trouble. So I glide on over the amended circulars of the Board and the announcement of the next Criminal Sessions of the High Court, which happily has, as yet, no terrors for me; and I look lazily at the price current, and think how that confounded Banya is cheating me, and that really I must put down the Waler this rains. Thus in my survey I come on to the advertisements, which I always reserve as a tit-bit for the end. I always chuckle when I see that my old friend greasy Ramlal has become an insolvent, and I cherish a well-founded suspicion that somehow he has made a good thing out of his bankruptcy, and that the three pice in the rupee which he offers in instalments represents only a small part of his available assets, and what weeping and gnashing of teeth there will be in the Gunj when the news arrives. But it is to the book catalogues I turn with the brightest interest. What a wonderful contrast it is to see "The Story of Maajun," which the modest cataloguer calls "a love tale;" and the "Dance of Krishna and the Gopis," which, we are told, is "a religious allegory; and Sribaksh, M.A., "on the revival of agriculture, based on the prohibition of cattle slaughter;" an tant-General! Pro pudor!

So I turn on a little further till I come to peruse the Municipal supplement, where Lala Chalaki Lal takes the place of Fareb-ud-din, and both of them are described as "gentlemen." Such is "lokil sluff." This is almost too much for me, and I am closing my journal sadly when my eye falls on something which is very decidedly to the purpose. Musammat So-and-So has found 32-gold and 5 silver coins valued at Rs. 129-6-0 under a banyan tree, and, what is more curious, has been honest enough to admit to it. Or did some rascal inform on her? I sincerely hope that no one will come and claim this treasure trove, and that the Collector duly makes it over to the Musammat. And this sets me thinking what a good thing it would be if I could only do a little digging myself and find pots of gold-mohurs and rupees. How I should enjoy digging up a Banya, particularly just after he became bankrupt, or a member of a Local Board! I bet this merry land would not hold me much longer; I would be off "to the West, to the West, to the land of the free." But then it saddens me to think that perhaps when I do get there, this, my favourite journal, will have lost some of its savour.'

A more or less active semblance of opposition is being worked up in Sind against transfer to the Punjab; and meetings have been held in Hyderabad and Sukkur, according to telegrams received from Native sources. We have seen, however, enough of Native telegrams about "enthusiastic mass meetings" elsewhere to attribute much importance to these; and our own correspondents at these places appear to attach no importance whatever to the proceedings, such as they were. At Karachi, however, where some European public opinion really exists, and where the materials for forming an intelligent Native public opinion also are partly to be found, we know that the attempted meeting was a fiasco. We do not think, therefore, that the agitation in Sind need be seriously considered, until we have better evidence of its reality; while the arguments which have been repeatedly advanced in favour of the transfer retain their full force. Certain new objections raised by the Bombay Press have little weight. It will not deter the merchants of Karachi from desiring the transfer, to be told that if they remain connected with Bombay they might some day have the daily postal communication via Kathiawar, which they have so long been refused.

THE SONG OF THE WOMEN.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

"Our feelings in this matter are shared by thousands and thousands of our sisters throughout the land—and of this we are assured by many signs not likely to come under the observation of the outside world."—Vide Address of the Women of Utterpara to Lady Dufferin.

How shall we know the worship we would do her?
The walls are high and she is very far.
How can the woman's message reach unto her
Above the tumult of the packed bazaar?
Free Wind of Chait, against the lattice blowing,
Bear thou our thanks lest she depart unknowing.

Go forth across the fields we may not roam in—
Go forth beyond the trees that rim the city—
To whatsoe'er fair place she hath her home in
Who dowered us with wealth of help and pity,
Out of our shadow pass and seek her singing:—
"I bear no gifts but Love alone for bringing."

Say that we be a feeble folk who greet her,
But old in grief and very wise in tears,
Say that we, being desolate, entreat her
That she forget us not in after years;
For we have looked on light and it were grievous
To dim that dawning if our Lady leave us.

The consort of a ruler—more than human—Remote, unseen, a gracious name alone?

Nay surely, for we know her very woman
Who, stooping down, hath made our woe her own.
Fear not, O Wind, but swiftly follow after,
And take our cry, half weeping and half laughter.

By life that passed with none to stay the failing,
By Love's sad harvest garnered ere the Spring,
When Love-in-Ignorance wept unavailing
O'er young buds dead before the blossoming,
By all the purdah cloaked, the cold moon viewed
In past grim years, declare our gratitude.

By hands uplifted to the Gods that heard not,
By gifts that found no favour in their sight,
By faces bent above the babe that stirred not,
By nameless horrors of the stifling night,
By ills foredone—by peace her toils discover—Bid Earth be good beneath and Heaven above her.

If she have sent her servants in our pain,
If she have fought with Death and dulled his sword,
If she have given back our sick again,
And to our breast the weakling lips restored,
Is it a little thing that she hath wrought?
Then Birth and Death and Motherhood be naught.

Go forth, O Wind, the message on thy wings,
And they shall hear thee pass and bid thee speed,
In reed-roofed hut or white-walled home of kings,
Who have been holpen by her in their need.
All spring shall give thee fragrance, and the wheat
Shall be a golden floorcloth to thy feet.

Haste, for our hearts are with thee—take no rest
Olear voiced ambassador from sea to sea,
Proclaim the blessing manifold, confessed
Of those in darkness by her hand set free.
Then very softly to her Presence move,
And whisper:—"Lady! Lo, they know and love!"

WHO IS TO BLAME? (Pioneer.)

It is easy to dwell on the nice qualities of the Native races their "warmhearted and obliging" disposition, their recognition of the duties of hospitality, and so forth. Their gratitude is such that the smallest service done them is not easily for gotten, and they find it exceedingly difficult to understand the independence and indifference of the English people in India. Our relatives at home will, no doubt, hurl strong language at our heads under the influence of this pathetic statement of the case. But would they be surprised to hear that, after all, considering everything in the long account of the relationship between Europeans and Natives in this country, the social prejudices and obstructive habits of the Natives have had much more to do with keeping the two races apart than any supposed exclusiveness of feeling on the side of the European? Our Mahomedan critic does not say one word about this, and to that extent his otherwise very admirable letter is disingenuous. The wretched and miserable difficulties about eating and drinking are at the root of the whole trouble. An acquaintance may have all sorts of good qualities, but while he thinks himself polluted—to the extent even of having to go through ceremonies of purification—if he sits down to a meal with you, he can never develop into a friend or intimate. No one would suggest that they should degrade the simplicity and purity of their own national dietary to purchase the friendship of the meat-eating, wine-drinking European. But while Brahmin friends will not even sit down in an Anglo-Indian verandah and join in afternoon tea, with no foul flesh meats in sight, it is not the Anglo-Indian coarseness of living that stands between him and free social intercourse with Europeans, but simply his own pedantry and enslavement to absurd restrictions which the wisest and best reformers of his own religion have been most eager to put aside.

INCOME-TAX ANOMALIES. (Lucknow Express.)

We apprehend that the operation of the tax will differ but little from our own experience of it in Oudh, and, indeed, present the same anomalies which are so apparent in its work ing all over the country. Take up any administration report one may, and the first feature which crops up is the striking discrepancy between the known wealth of individuals and the figures at which they are assessed for income-tax. Of course, we are quite prepared to admit that it is a most difficult matter to arrive at an accurate knowledge of individual incomes, even if accounts are overhauled by assessing officers; we are quite prepared to be told, too, that false declarations are systematically filed by many people; and this is borne out as regards the Punjab, where, if the tabulated figures of assessment are a guide, there can hardly be any men of means at all. As a matter of fact, this class is conspicuous by its absence from the roll of high income-tax payers. The moral is, that a direct tax of the sort is most unpopular, quite antagonistic to the instinct and sentiments and traditions of the people, and that ninety-nine out of every hundred payers of the tax regard it as quite the correct thing to mislead the tax-collector, or the assessing authority as to their actual ways and means.

We do not yet know how much mischief may have been caused by the policy pursued to wards Chinese assumption in Upper Burma. The Chinese understand and respect the application of force, but have no special reverence for chivalrous forbearance towards the comparatively feeble. Not only was Lord Randolph Churchill's motive in consenting to despatch decennial presents to the Court of Peking certain to be misunderstood and misrepresented—as it has been—but another mistake is being committed in awaiting the convenience of the Chinese Commissioners before marking out the boundary line of our new province. The proper course would have been to have assigned a fixed date, with the intimation that, if the Chinese officials were not then at their post, the work would be done without them. In like manner the mode of dealing with this miserable Lingtu affair has not been masterly. As soon as the Thibetans began to construct their fort a sufficient body of troops should at once have marched to the further borders of Sikkim, and cleared out the intruders. The consideration now shown to them will not be properly appreciated. It will serve rather as an encouragement to repeat an offence that can be committed with personal impunity.

BOMBAY PRETENSIONS. (Bombay Gazette.)

Much use has been made of the argument that the territory traversed by such an important highway as the Indus should be under one jurisdiction. If this argument in favour of unity of jurisdiction is worth anything, the argument which claims unity of jurisdiction along a line of commercial communication like that which is being established between Bombay and the most remote part of the Central 'Provinces is worth no less. Follies die hard, or there would be no need now to deal with the extraordinary argument about the seditious newspapers of this presidency, in which Lord Northbrook found reasons twelve years ago against acting upon Lord Salisbury's suggestion to bring the Central Provinces under the Government of Bombay. It reappears to-day in the article in an up-country paper to which we have alluded. We are there told that "it would be a grave mistake to seek to bring about a solidarity of interest between the Mahrattas of the Bombay Presidency and those of Nagpur by bringing them under the same administration. If in any province of India there is simmering political discontent of a serious kind it is surely in Bombay, and it would be unwise in the extreme to do anything to strengthen those elements of trouble by creating artificial bonds of union between the Dekkan Mahrattas and their distant kinsmen in another part of India." No one could use such an argument as this without thereby proclaiming an entire ignorance of the public feeling of this Presidency.

THE LATE MR. A. DALGLEISH. (Englishman.)

No more adventurous career has been known in India in recent years than that which has been cut short by a Pathan bullet. The deceased was a man in the prime of life, of an active, enterprising character, whose strange, romentic life marked him out as a born pioneer, and whose colloquial knowledge of the Turki languages gained for him the consideration of the leading students of the Central Asian question. Fifteen years ago, Young Dalgleish joined the Central Asian Trading Company, which was established under the able direction of Mr. Russell, for the purpose of developing the trans-Himzlayan trade. The young assistant accompanied Mr. Russell's party to Yarkund, and displayed even on that first excursion peculiar aptitude for the work to which he subsequently devoted himself. He got on well with the people, picked up more than a smattering of the language, and, while displaying the qualities of a good trader, lost no chance of observing the ways and customs, the leanings and prejudices, the religious, social, and political characteristics of people by whom he was surrounded.

There were many difficulties in the path of Mr. Russell's enterprise, and the speculation was complicated by issues which had little to do with trade. Not long after the company was started, the road to Yarkund and Kashgar was closed on account of the feuds of the tribes, and although matters went on for some time after this, and Mr. Russell journeyed again to Yarkund, the venture had to be wound up. Meanwhile, Mr. Dalgleish had formed a high opinion of the possibilities of such an enterprise, and where others had failed he determined to succeed. Having regard to his sad fate it might be said that his resolve was to succeed or to die in the attempt. He made repeated trading excursions to Kashgar extending over many years, and his ventures were as successful as could be hoped, but it may be doubted whether in this respect his expectations were ever fully realised.

But if as a trader his ambition was only partly fulfilled, it may be questioned whether he would have exchanged his lot for one of happier circumstances. He had conceived a deep interest in the people of Turkestan, and, as his knowledge of them grew, he began to entertain a definite hope of being able to render his semi-civilised friends the service of bringing them into closer political relations with the Government of India. One who knew him well wrote some time ago:—

"Probably no European living has had equal opportunities with Mr. Dagleish of knowing the people of that part of the world, and I should certainly regard his opinion as to the views of the Yarkundis and their neighbours as more valuable than even those of Mr. Ney Elias, for the Yarkundis and Kashgaris, like all the people of the East, are not prone to speak the open truth with reference to their own opinions and wishes to a man who, like Mr. Mr. Ney Elias, is known to them as a political or semi-political agent of a Government. Personally, I believe, Mr. Ney Elias has always been most popular, but his known political character is a bar to anything like real confidence between him and the people among whom he has lived for many years." No one, we may add, knew better than Mr. Ney Elias the extent of Mr. Dalgleish's knowledge, or the singular tact, resource, and ability with which he could manage a wild, primitive people, and pilot a daring expedition amid the quicksands by which in that savage part of the world such exploits are environed.

In a letter regarding Mr. Dalgleish, written seven years ago, Mr. Alfred A. Browne, who was a personal friend, says: "The opinion I formed from conversing with experts was that the trans-Himalayan trade was well worth attention. Nothing more was wanted to produce an early development of the trade than a little whole-hearted and energetic encouragement on the part of the Indian Government. Mr. Dalgleish, after two journeys to Yarkund, was so satisfied of the ample field before him as a trader that he waited for close upon three years in Kashmir for the reopening of the route. The obstacles which nature puts in the way of a route only open at certain seasons of the year, and the most elevated trade route in the world, are comparatively unimportant beside the difficulties which a little energy upon the part of the Indian Government would be sufficient to disperse. One is constantly reminded of the striking contrast between the policy adopted by Russia in Asia, and that which has been allowed to check the tlegitimate development of the trade and commercial interest of India. Every year that passes finds Russia progressing in the East. I do not refer so much to her military movements as to her trade. A few days after General Sir Sam Browne had pitched his camp outside the walls of Jellalabad I found it impossible to obtain paper of English manufacture in the bazaars of that town, though Russian paper was abundant, and it is well known to many of the Punjah how Russian tea-sets and other goods, posteens, &c., with the Russian Custom House stamps, are to be had in India itself. Surely, these facts speak for themselves. That the people of Central Asia and Kashgaria would welcome the opening of the trans-Himalyan trade cannot, I think, be disopening of the trans-Himalyan trade cannot, I think, be disputed. Russia has been first in the market, and the progress of Indian trade with Kashgar will consequently be hampered for a time, but if, as I have said, properly encouraged by the Indian Government, it cannot fail to propress steadily and continuously." Whether or not it is held that poor Dalgleish's experience tends to verify these impressions, it cannot be said that he was embarrassed by official encouragement

Some years ago the deceased tried hard to induce Lord Ripon's Government to establish an Agent at Yarkund in order to counterbalance the presence of a Russian representative. The Government declined to take this step, but it is an open secret that Dalgleish has been employed in recent years in a semi-official capacity. His death is a very sad one, and will probably be the subject of deeper regret in Europe than in India. Certainly, the learned societies of Europe have testified to a truer appreciation of his services than can be looked for in this country.

BENGAL.

It is probable, says the Englishman, that questions will be asked in Parliament in connection with the sad death of Mr. Donald Mackinnon, from typhoid, in Calcutta recently. The questions will be directed to the responsibility of the Municipality.

Pality.

Three persons, well known in Oudh years ago, have been heard of during this month, writes the Statesman. Nawab Zaighum-ud-Dowla, who has been appointed Urdu tutor to Her Majesty, was the son of the last of the Oudh Premiers, Ali Nukki Khan. Not long ago he officiated as special subregistrar at Durbhunga, but this post he resigned as not being good enough for the son of a Premier. The present officiating Home Secretary at Hyderabad, Syed Hassain Belgrami, comes from Oudh; at one time he edited the defunct Lucknow Times. He comes from Belgram in the Hurdui district, where several noted Mahomedan families live. Rightly judging that for him Hyderabad was a better field than Oudh, he migrated thither some years ago, accompanied by Sir Salar Jung to England, some years ago, accompanied by Sir Salar Jung to England, and is now about the foremost man in the mining State of Hyderabad. The third is Mr. E. N. C. Braddon, formerly Superintendent of Stamps and Excise, an office created for him by Sir George Yule, and abolished when he retired with a pension of Rs 5,000 a year. Mr. Braddon, who is a brother of Miss Braddon, the novelist, went to Tasmania, where he became leader of the Opposition in Parliament, and was in a fair way of becoming Premier, when he chose to accept the lucrative and pleasant post of Agent-General of the colony in England. Thus Oudh has furnished very nearly two Premiers in two distant lands, and a tutor to Her Majesty to boot.

MADRAS.

THE Government has sanctioned an estimate, amounting to Rs.1,44,131, for the preparation and collection of materials required for the new Madras High Court buildings. A sum of Rs.2,15,000 has been provided for the buildings in the Provincial budget of 1888-89. As the eyesore near the Marina, known as the Senate House, is an awful example of departmental tests it is to be known as the Marina Marina the Senate House, is an awful example of departmental tests it is to be known as well as the Marina Marin mental taste, it is to be hoped, says the Madras Mail, that the Government will afford the public an opportunity of seeing and offering an opinion upon the proposed elevation of the High Court buildings before the design of the Consulting Architect is finally accepted.

Various changes are, the Madras Times hears, to be effected in the office of the Port Officer of Madras. Government has, we have reason to believe, decided upon abolishing the appointment of Examiner of Port Fund Accounts, at present held by Mr. Bartlett. The Agent for Government Consignments is to be constituted Personal Assistant of the Port of the P ments is to be constituted Personal Assistant of the Port Officer, with an additional allowance of Rs.250 per mensem, making his salary Rs.600 per mensem in all. The salary of the Office Manager is to be reduced to Rs.150 per mensem, and the Deputy Manager is to be dispensed with altogether. Mr. Bartlett, the present Examiner of Port Fund Accounts, who is over fifty-five years of age, has, it seems, received three months' notice, at the expiration of which time he will retire on a pension; and no further extension of service will be allowed to Captain Rowland, the present Agent for Government Consignments, will, consequently, retire in November next. Other changes are, we understand, also likely to be effected in the Accounts and Store branches of the Port Office; and some alteration will probably be effected in the present dual arrangement under which boats are maintained present dual arrangement under which boats are maintained both by the Port Officer and the Harbour Trust Board.

MISS VAN OVERBEKE has been appointed House Surgeon, Pestonji Hormasji Cama Hospital for Women and Children, with effect from November 8th, 1887, the date on which Miss Charlotte Ellaby, M.D., resigned her appointment in the hospital.

Mr. F. S. P. Lely, C.S., Administrator of the Porbunder MR. F. S. P. LELY, C.S., Administrator of the Porblinder State, has been granted privilege leave for three months. Captain W. P. Kennedy, acting Fourth Assistant to the Political Agent, Kattywar, acts as Administrator of the Pore-bunder State, in addition to his other duties, during Mr. Lely's absence on privilege leave.

COLONEL SIR W. S. SETON, Bart., Staff Corps, Assistant Adjutant-General, Poona Division, has been granted twelve months' leave on private affairs; Lieutenant R. D. Broome, Staff Corps, Wing Officer and Adjutant 9th Bombay Infantry, has been allowed one year's leave.

MESSES. LUND AND BLOCKLEY have again successfully competed for the manufacture of the Guzerat Pig-sticking Cup, which was won by J. L. Symons. This year it takes the form of a three-handled Maux Cup, similar in shape to the Bombay Polo Challenge Cup, manufactured by the same firm, and presented by the Bombay Gymkhana to the Central India Horse to company the beauty Polo Challenge Cup. to commemorate their success in having won the Bombay Polo Tournament in the three successive years 1882, 1883, and 1884. One of the shields contains a scene representing the Hunt in progress, and has been very artistically designed by Mr. F. C. progress, and has been very artistically designed by Mr. F. C. Macrae; another a speared pig in bold relief; and the third an inscription. This form of cup is different to those competed for in the two previous years. That of last year, won by Mr. Bulkley on "Templer," is in the form of an old Monteith Bowl, similar to one of the seven silver bowls presented to his Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught by the officers of the Rifle Brigade on his marriage. Of two shields one contains a pig-sticking seems and another the result inscription. sticking scene, and another the usual inscription. The 1886 win was by the late Captain M. B. Salmon on "Shabaz." This cup is in the form of a trophy representing a jungle scene with pig. The Salmon Cup for ponies, which fell to Mr. H. Askwith on his cheb p Redskin, is a handsome silver bowl, similar in shape to the one won by Dr. Tully in 1887. The 1886 Cup is a Queen Anne fluted bowl, and was won by the late Captain M. B. Salmon.

N.W. PROVINCES AND PUNJAB.

GOVERNMENT have sanctioned beforehand an expenditure of Rs. 3,000 on forty tents for the accommodation of prisoners during any general outbreak of cholera or other epidemic disease that may occur in the North-West Provinces.

THE opening of the furlough and privilege leave season finds the Punjab shorthanded as regards the Commission—not to the detriment of the province, but to the inconvenience of the officers who wish to go away. Is was known early in the year that there would be some difficulty in filling the gaps of the crustoper and on informal ambiguiting programs and the the year that there would be some difficulty in filling the gaps of the summer, and an informal application was made to the North-West Government for the loan of two or three Divisional Judges. The North-West had none to spare, and in consequence two Punjab Divisional Judges are stranded until such time as the Local Government can grant them leave on the Chief Court's report that there are two officers qualified to take their posts. At present they wait.

A QUESTION as to the attendance of purda-nashin ladies at court has arisen in the North-West. In a case pending before the Sessions Judge of Allahabad, three native ladies petitioned that they might be examined by commission, on the ground of their being purda-nashin ladies of good position, whose attendance in court even unexposed would be considered a disgrace. The pleader who represented the accused strongly insisted on the necessity of the personal attendance of these ladies, and contended that the court should have the advantage of observing their demeanour under examination. Following the ruling of the Allahabad courts, the Sessions judge directed that the petitioners must attend personally, but might be examined in their palkis, without being exposed, if properly identified. The petitioners having applied to the High Court to set aside the above order of the Sessions Judge, Mr. Justice Straight delivered the following decision on April 28th:—"I to set aside the above order of the Sessions Judge, Mr. Justice Straight delivered the following decision on April 28th:—"I cannot interfere with the learned Judge's order. Looking to the nature of the charges upon which the accused stands committed for trial, and the materials upon which the case is sought to be made against him, I can readily understand why the learned Judge has considered it necessary, not only in the interests of the accused, but of justice, that he and the assessors should at least have an opportunity of hearing the evidence of the ladies. I feel quite confident that the learned Judge will take every reasonable means to have the examination conducted in as much privacy as is consistent with the proceedings of a court of justice."

BURMA.

THE Pioneer learns on indisputable authority that the loyal Karens have been generally exempted from disarmament, but certain conditions necessary to prevent guns from falling into the hands of dacoits have been insisted on. These conditions have been modified so as to meet the wishes of the Karens themselves, who admittedly want to carry arms, not for their own defence, but for sporting purposes. The Chief Commisown defence, but for sporting purposes. The Chief Commissioner has really taken precautions to prevent inconvenience to the Karens, whom he wishes to see armed to reasonable extent. There is another side to the question also. The distinction already made between Karens and Burmans has undoubtedly created ill-feeling in the minds of the latter which the Government cannot afford to aggravate. On the general question of disarmament every day's experience proves that guns left without precautions in the hands of villagers are liable to be taken by dacotis, a remark which applies to Lower $\vec{a}_i$; well as Upper Burma. is well as Upper Burma.

MR. WOOLRIDGE, son of Colonel Woolridge, according to the correspondent of a Burma paper, did a trifling thing the other day in Burma, which has not been particularly noticed anywhere. In a rencontre with dacoits Mr. Woolridge's Subedar was desperately hit, and he fell; whereupon Mr. Woolridge, despite the entreaties of the disabled Subedar to save himself from the frightful odds, threw himself almost single-handed against the enemy and picked up the Subedar. Efforts were made to make him abandon his man, and a hot running fight was maintained, until Mr. Woolridge reached a pagoda, to the top of which he climbed, where, with only three Punjabis, he resisted so long and stubbornly that the crowd had to give him up in despair, after losing many on their own side. He is described as being a big powerful man of twenty-seven, standing over six feet, with a determined countenance, all which is very likely. Whether regarded in the light of his solicitude for the Subedar, or the Subedar's solicitude for him, perhaps this rugged fighting with common Burman dacoits has offered an episode which is as heroic and self-sacrificing as any on correspondent of a Burma paper, did a trifling thing the other an episode which is as heroic and self-sacrificing as any on record; and the more noteworthy because it was between a European and a Native, between whom ties of attachment are said to be weak.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

SHEYKH HASSAN, THE SPIRITUALIST.*

A belief in the power of summoning the spirits of the dead has existed at all times and amongst all nations. From the period of the Witch of Endor to the present day there never have been lacking persons who place implicit confidence in the ability of a chosen few to recall the spirits of departed souls. But nowhere has this belief obtained a greater footing then in the dreamy visioners. Fact and many and many old many lines. than in the dreamy, visionary East; and many and marvellous have been the tales which told of the sectaries who, under the name of "Ruhanis"—a term equivalent to our "seer"—have bewildered and astonished their less-favoured brethren. Mr. Hillam has so far varied the scene that he has thrown his anecdotes into the form of a narrative of adventure and love; he has clothed the bare sketch of spiritualism with the gar ments of romance, and clad the nakedness of the supernatural with the drapery of real life.

His work is clever, and by no means void of interest; but the atmosphere of unreality is hard to breathe, and stifling to common sense; it is impossible to shake off the feeling of doubt and misbelief. "How can these things be?" is the constant any of the perplayed reader. For those however who constant cry of the perplexed reader. For those, however, who love to roam amidst marvels, and to live amidst the "uncanny," the work may well stand in good favour; and for others there can be no harm in learning what Spiritualists would have us believe is stern reality and sober, everyday truth.

THE HISTORICAL FAMILIES OF DUMFRIESSHIRE AND THE BORDER WARS.†

Scotland is so rich in the annals of war, the deeds of her great families are so inextricably mixed up with the history of the families are so inextricably mixed up with the history of the country, that Mr. Johnstone, in giving to the public this record of Dumfriesshire, has produced a work at once instructive and interesting to the general reader. A glance at the table of contents will serve to show the great names which posterity has immortalised. They are honoured, as having in their day upheld the best traditions of a noble race. Many of these houses, too, still flourish; and it may well be imagined with what pleasure and pride they will receive this testimony to the prowess and doughty deeds of their ancestors. The work is honestly and carefully executed, and deserves encomium on its merits. Perhaps, however, the not least important circummerits. Perhaps, however, the not least important circumstance attendant on the appearance of this pamphlet is the letter from Thomas Carlyle to the Rev. Edward Irving, a composition now for the first time unearthed from the archives of obscurity. Characteristic as it is of the man who penned it, it needs no other passport then that it is the composition of it needs no other passport than that it is the composition of the "seer of Chelsea."

THE WAR OF THE SUCCESSION IN SPAIN.*

Colonel Parnell's object in writing an account of the War of Succession in Spain appears twofold—first, to present to the public a naval and military chronicle of the events of the campaign; and, secondly, to correct the many errors which abound in the historical narratives devoted to that period of England's greatness. The foremost of these designs speaks for itself, and it is not recovery to de most block that period on the terms of the second and it is not necessary to do more than record an opinion that the gallant son of Mars has discharged his self-imposed duty with care, fidelity, and no considerable literary acumen. The style is vigorous and full of life, and the narrative is clear, concise, and impartial.

As regards the second aim in view, it is obvious that the ground is doubtful, in so far that, if Colonel Parnell's facts be accurate, the history of Queen Anne's reign must be in great accurate, the history of Queen Anne's reign must be in great measure re-written. From Peterborough downwards there is scarce a leading character but what appears in a totally different light to the ordinary view which has been enter-tained for the last century or more. The world has honoured not a few of the personages who played a prominent part in the wars of those days; but if the volume under consideration be able to stand the test of examination and refutation, many of the number will live in the future as examples of a mistaken the number will live in the future as examples of a mistaken estimate of worth—indeed, some notabilities whose names are esteemed and revered will come badly out of this contest for truth, while tothers almost unknown to fame will stand forth on the pages of time as heroes, warriors, and men of renown. Far be it from us to gainsay what Colonel Parnell propounds. He may be, and we think probably he is, right in his estimate of the doings and actions of the men of that day. He assuredly gives chapter and verse for all he writes; there is no taint or suspicion of malevolence in his language, and his calm, dispassionate reasonings promote confidence in the soundness of his deductions.

We pass no judgment on the merits of the case, content to express a confident opinion that Colonel Parnell has produced a work of deep research, exhibiting signs of care on every page; and he merits recognition for a very valuable contribution to the literature of the reign of Queen Anne.

Whence comes, and how, the ordinary india rubber with which we are all so familiar? The answer is simple, but it embraces information which is not known to the vast majority of persons in this country. "The major part of all the world's supply—and certainly all the better qualities—are provided by the vast forests of the Amazons, where, however, the gathering is often made amidst such scenes of barbarity as may well recall the worst days of slavery in the United States, or the slave trade of Africa." Such being the case Mr. Wells has conceived the happy notion of working up his experiences in those regions into a romance in which the interest is centred in regions so little known, and in people so little understood. understood

The result is a volume in every way worthy of the reputation which its author achieved on the appearance of his former narrative relating to the Brazils. There is adventure enough and to spare to satisfy the most ardent craving for excitement —episodes of every sort and description, tales of vengeance, tales of daring, tales of peril, tales of conflict, tales of stratagem, tales of ambuscade, tales of love, tales of war, tales of brutality, tales of avarice, tales of land, tales of water. And to add to the attraction the scene is laid amidst the most gorgeous regions of the world, where nature's loveliness and charms are married by man's foul vices and hideous cruelties. Nor is the comical element wanting, for there are some inexpressibly droll love-making adventures which well repay perusal. Taken as a whole, the volume ranks high as a sound work of fiction, suitable for readers of all ages, but more especially fitted for the rising generation of the land, who, spite the effeminancy of modern times still admire plack and courage. To such of modern times, still admire pluck and courage. To such "The Voice of Urbano" will speak with a tongue which all will admire, and many of the more ardent amongst them will

SIR WILLIAM HUNTER ON INDIAN INDUSTRIES.—II.

Wanted: A commercial Viceroy for India. This, says Sir William Hunter, is India's present need. "India is now waiting for an English statesman with breadth of mind to grasp the situation, and with firmness of purpose to give effect to his views. India has had conquering Viceroys and consolidating Viceroys; she now waits for a commercial Viceroy. A whole series of economic questions of the first magnitude are impending-questions which only an English statesman of the first class will have the courage and authority effectively to deal with." This is all true enough, but we are afraid that India will have to wait a long time yet for the coming of such a The importance of those very economic quesruler. tions will have first to be recognised in England before an Indian Viceroy will be able to have aught but a voice-which may fall only on deaf ears at homein their treatment. For, as India is being brought nearer to England, so is the power of the Viceroy being weakened. The real ruler of the vast Indian Empire will surely be, if the present system continues, the Secretary of State alone, the Viceroy in Calcutta or Simla being merely With party Government still ruling his lieutenant. England, what hope is there that Secretaries of State for India who come and go with Ministries will understand and work for her commercial interests better and more intelligently in the future than in the past? And then, when the jealousy of home manufacturers is roused by what seems to threaten some monopoly-we need not go far for an illustration-what chance is there of a Secretary of State favouring the growing Indian industry and holding the doctrine which Sir William Hunter correctly holds—that fair competition must result in benefiting both countries? That doctrine is not yet understood even in the English strongholds of Free Trade. This very day the Times publishes a telegram from its Calcutta correspondent, giving as strongly-worded a protest from the Viceroy of India in Council against the selfishness of a great London company towards an Indian industry; but the great London company triumphs, and India goes to the wall. And as it was in the beginning so we fear it will continue to be, until Englishmen in general choose to take a real interest in Indian matters. But Indian matters are uncongenial to English tastes; Anglo-Indians who try to explain them in Parliament are voted bores, and the representatives of the people who form the House of Commons are content to leave the Indian Empire and all its concerns to the wisdom of the Secretary of State for the time being. An honest and conscientious Viceroy may recommend or protest, but the authority which Sir William Hunter would have him wield will not be given to him. Had Lord Mayo's career not been cut short by the assassin's knife he might have become before he laid down his office such a commercial Viceroy as Sir William Hunter calls for. Lord Northbrook, it was thought, would have played such a rôle, but he failed to show either "breadth of mind" or "firmness of purpose." Nobody expected Lord Lytton to play a commercial rôle. Lord Ripon thought more of giving India political reforms, which the country was not ripe for, and Lord Dufferin has had his time fully occupied in trying to amend some of the blunders of his predecessor, and in endeavouring to consolidate our latest annexation. Lord Lansdowne is hardly likely to be a commercial Viceroy, for he will have his hands weighed down, too, with political and military questions. The rest, which is so necessary for India to secure her more rapid development and progress. in commercial matters has, not yet been secured for her. The political agitators are alone being heard to-day. We would that it were otherwise; but facts are stubborn things, and facts are against our wish. But Sir William Hunter has done good service in endeavouring here to arouse interest in and call attention to the growth of Indian industries, so that the dawn of that happy commercial future which he has so brightly pictured in eloquent words. may be advanced to the more perfect day. He has lifted up his voice boldly and wisely, and we can but hope that its echoes will not be allowed to die away in silence and forgetfulness.

FROM MANCHURIA AND PEKING TO KASHMIR.

Lieut. F. E. Younghusband, of the King's Dragoon Guards, gave an Lieut. F. E. Younghusband, of the King's Dragoon Guards, gave an account of his journey across Central Asia, from Manchuria and Peking to Kashmir over the Mustagh Pass, at a meeting of the Royal Geographical Society held at the London University, Burlingtongardens, on the 14th inst. General Strachey (president) occupied the chair. A number of distinguished persons and explorers were present. The lecturer commenced by giving a brief résumé of his exploration of Manchuria in company with Mr. H. E. M. James, which that gentleman described in his able work entitled, "The Long White Mountain." man described in his able work entitled, "The Long White Mountain." Allusion was made to the great activity Manchuria is exhibiting in military preparations. After paying a tribute to the hospitality of Sir John and Lady Walsham, which he enjoyed during his stay in Peking, the traveller proceeds with a description of his journey across Central Asia. He left Peking on April 4, 1887, with one servant, and the next day passed through the inner branch of the Great Wall. "Here, under the eyes of the Emperor," he continues, "it is a magnificent structure, built of immense blocks of granite. It is some forty or fifty feet in height, and wide enough at the top to drive two carriages abreast on. One hundred miles from Peking it had dwindled down to a miserable mud wall, not twenty feet in height, of no thickness, and with gaps in it often from a quarter to half a mile in width. On April 12 I passed through the Great Wall, entering what Marco Polo calls the Land of Gog and Magog. For the next two days I passed through a hilly country inhabited by Chinese, though it really belongs to Mongolia; but on the 14th I emerged on to the real steppes, which are the characteristic features of Mongolia Proper. Stretching far away in the distance there was a great rolling grassy plain, on which which are the characteristic features of Mongolia Proper. Stretching far away in the distance there was a great rolling grassy plain, on which the flocks and herds and the yurtas, or felt-tents, of the Mongols were scattered about. These people offered a striking contrast to the Chinese inhabiting the districts I had just left. They were strong and robust, with round ruddy faces, very simple minded, and full of hearty good humour. They are entirely pastoral and nomadic in their habits, and do not take to agricultural pursuits. The old warlike spirit which made them so powerful in the days of Ghenghis Khan has now disappented completely. The Chinese Government has purposely encouraged the men to become Lamas, and now it is said that as much as 60 per cent, of the whole male population are Lamas, who by their couraged the men to become Lamas, and now it is said that as much as 60 per cent. of the whole male population are Lamas, who by their religion are neither allowed to marry nor to fight.

After crossing the cultivated plain round Kuei-hua-cheng we ascended the buttress range on the great Mongolian plateau, which along the route I followed is generally from 4,000 to 6,000 feet above the sea-level, with a few depressions 2,000 or 3,000 feet. For some days I passed over an undulating country, with grass meadows and clear streams of pure water. But gradually the aspect of the country became more and more barren, the streams disappeared, and water could only be obtained from the rough wells or water-holes dug by former caravans. No grass could be seen, and instead the country was covered with dry and stunted plants, burnt brown by the sun by day covered with dry and stunted plants, burnt brown by the sun by day and nipped at night by the frost.

After crossing the Galpin Gobi I passed along the southern part of the Hurku hills, crossing Prejevalsky's route at the Bortson well. It was now of interest to find out whether the range extended as far vestward as the Tian-shan or whether it formed a continuation of the Altai Mountains. We travelled on, then, in a north-west direction for 190 miles over a plain lying between the Hurku Hills and a similar 193 miles over a plain lying between the Hurku Hills and a similar but somewhat lower range running parallel to it on the south at an average distance of 30 miles. A low watershed connecting these two ranges was crossed, and we then descended into a low-lying sandy tract very much similar in character to the Galpin Gobi. The Hurku range here comes to an end, its extreme length being about 220 miles. It is highest at its western extremity, where the peaks are probably about 8,000 feet high. It presents a bare sterile appearance throughout, though stunted shrubs can be found in the hollows and along the system of the standard of the altripus survey of the Altri watercourses. We now approached the outlying spurs of the Altai Mountains, and on some of the higher peaks to the north could be seen patches of snow. These mountains are perfectly barren, the upper portion composed of lare rock and the lower of long gravel slopes formed of the debris of the rocks above. In such an extremely dry climate, exposed to the icy cold winds of winter and the fierce rays of the summer sun, and unprotected by one atom of soil, the rocks here, as also in every other part of the Gobi, crumble away to a remarkable extent, and there being no rainfall sufficient to wash away the debris, the lower features of a range gradually get covered with a mass of debris falling from the upper portions, wash away the debris, the lower features of a range gradually get covered with a mass of debris falling from the upper portions, and in the course of time a uniform slope is created, often 30 or 40 miles in length, and it is only for a few hundred feet at the top that the original jagged rocky outline is seer. I unfortunately was unable to spare any time to shoot, as Hami was still a long way off, and some 2,000 miles of country beyond Hami had to be traversed before India could be reached. We accordingly pushed on, and at last one evening from the top of a hill I saw far away in the distance, and scarcely distinguishable from clouds, the snowy outline of the Tian-Shan or Celestial Mountains. The next march, however, was the most trying of all. The route descends into the desert of Zungaria, which separates the Tian-Shan and Altai mountain systems. We passed out of the low broken ranges of hills which lie at the base of the higher ridges, emerging on to a great open plain of bare gravel, without a blade of vegetation. This is the lowest point I reached in the Gobi. We now began to ascend the slopes of the Tian-Shan Mountains, and as we were travelling on through the night we were suddenly hailed by a shrill voice. The guide replied, and then led us to a house in which we found some Turki men and women. This was the first sign that we had left Mongolia and had now entered Chinese Turkistan. Running by the house was a little stream of the most delicious water, and well do I remember the delight with which I gulped down mouthful after mouthful of it. On descending the southern side of the Tian-Shan I expected to enter a fine well-populated country, but instead of that I expected to enter a fine well-populated country, but instead of that I found the same barren desert as before, with, however, a small casis every fifteen or twenty miles with a village and cultivated lands. On July 4 we at last reached Hami, having accomplished the distance of 1,255 miles from Kuei hua-cheng in seventy days. Now that I had reached Turkistan I thought that I should be able to say good-bye to desert-travelling, but was again disappointed, for the whole country is really nothing but a huge desert, with villages and towns situated in the cases formed by the succession of streams which flow down from the Tian-Shan Mountains.

The inhabitants are industrious, but not such good cultivators as the Chinese. They stand in the greatest awe of the Chinese, who without in the least oppressing them, and without even an army of any size to cause it, yet produce an impression in the Turki mind of their overwhelming strength and importance. It is not only in Turkistan that the Chinese are considered so great a nation—greater, indeed, than either England or Russia—but also to a greater extent indeed, than either England or Russia—but also to a greater extent than may be generally supposed, in such States as Kashmir and Nepal, and even by Afghan and Hindustani merchants who have travelled all through India and Russian Turkistan. Nobody there believes either that we took Peking. They know that we arrived there, but think we were driven back again by the Chinese; for if we took it, they say, why did not we keep it, or else burn it down? I left Hami on July 8, by the road through Pidjan to Turfan, which I reached on the 15th. Here, as at all the chief cities in Turkistan, there are two towns, the Mussulman and the Chinese. The former contained some very good shops, in which the chief articles sold were Russian piece-goods and shops, in which the chief articles sold were Russian piece-goods and ironmongery.

On August 19 we descended by a gorge to the great plain of Turkistan again, and on the 20th I reached Kashgar, and the following day called on the Russian Consul-General, M. Petrovsky, who received me most cordially, and told me all the latest European news.

In Kashgar and Yarkand you meet travelling merchants from all parts of Asia, and great numbers, too, of pilgrims who have been to Mecca through India. They all declaim loudly in praise of the English rule in India; not to me only, but to the surrounding crowd. They say the English are the only people who know how to really govern a country. The English make roads, railways, and canals, and build schools and hospitals, and look after the welfare of the people. Every one does what he likes and goes where he likes without restriction, and oppression is unknown. The Arabs were loudest of all in their praises, for they have evidently great respect for wealth. (Aption, and oppression is unknown. The Arabs were loudest of their praises, for they have evidently great respect for wealth. plause).

My servant and cart arrived from Aksu on August 25, and the following day I left Kashgar for Yarkand, which I reached on the 29th. Here I met with a hearty reception, for it was the home of poor Mr. Dalgleish, the enterprising trader who for so many years has been established in this place, and who, after accompanying Mr. Carey in his long and hazardous journey through Turkistan and Thibet to India, has just been murdered on the Karakoram Pass when returning again to Yarkand. Englishmen who live at home at ease have perhaps little idea how jealously the honour of their country is looked after by their fellow-countrymen in the remotest parts of the world. (Applause.) Throughout Turkistan I was told of the straightforward honest character of the "Chota Sahib," of his geniality, and of his ever-readiness racter of the "Chota Sahib," of his geniality, and of his ever-readiness to help the sick people, however numerous, who might come to him for medicine—and England owes much to the good name Andrew Dalgleish has established for her in Turkistan. I had now to prepare for the passage of the Himalayas, and as all the routes to Leh had been explored by Shaw, Hayward, and the Yarkand Mission, I determined to attempt the exploration of the most direct route to India, which leads over the Mustagh Pass to Skardu and Kashmir. This route, although it is considerably shorter than any other, has not latterly been used by traders, on account of the great physical difficulties which are encountered on the way, and because of other, has not latterly been used by traders, on account of the great physical difficulties which are encountered on the way, and because of the bands of Konjuti robbers who used formerly to raid even up to the Karakoram route, and no European has ever explored it.

Baltis from the upper valleys of the Shigar district used, however, to come over to Yarkand by this route till about ten years ago, when the Chinese ordered that all who came should be turned back—since which time the route has been entirely disused. There are considerable numbers, about 2,000, of these Baltis settled in the Yarkand district, where they gain a living by cultivating tobacco. I had therefore no difficulty in getting men to guide me over the mountains.

I took with me five Baltis and three Ladakhis, one of whon, Muhammad Esa or Drogpa, had been with Mr. Carey in his journey through Turkistan and Thibet. He was an inveluable servant, and to him I entrusted the task of organising and equipping the caravan.

through Turkistan and Thibet. He was an involuable servant, and to him I entrusted the task of organising and equipping the caravan. We had first to buy some good, sound, hardy ponies, then fit them out with pack-saddles, blankets, and three spare sets of shoes for each, and get a set of tools for shoeing them with. And as we should find no paths I had to take pickaxes and spades for road-making. While finally I gave to each man a long sheepskin coat and two pairs of shoes, so that there might be no fear of their breaking down on the way.

On Sept. 8 I left Yarkand, and on the 10th branched off from the ordinary route to Kashmir by Leh, at the small town of Kargalik. On the 15th I crossed the Tupa Dawán Pass, a very easy one, and only 10,400 feet high. The route then ascends the valley of the Tisnaf river.

Tisnaf river.

At the head of the Tisnaf river we left the track which leads over At the head of the Tisnaf river we left the track which leads over the Yangi Dawan to the Karakoram Pass and Leh, and struck off westwards to the Chiragh Saldi Pass. The ascent to this pass was very easy, leading gradually upwards over a wide open gravel plain. The next day we struck the Yarkand river at the camping ground. Chiragh Saldi, which is the furthest point reached by Mr. Haywar, in exploring the course of that river from its source downwards. It my eagerness to get a glimpse of the view on the other side I walked on ahead at a brisk pace, and ascended a small outstanding hill, from which I got the first sight of the great Mustagh range, which forms the watershed between the rivers which flow into the Indian Ocean. and those which take their way towards Central Asia. At my feet lay the broad valley of the Shaksgam river, bounded on each side by ranges of magnificent snowy mountains rising abruptly from either bank, while up this valley, far away in the distance, could be seen an immense glacier flowing down from the great main range of the Mustagh or Karakoram Mountains. The appearance of these mountains is extremely bold and rugged as they rise in a succession of needle peaks like hundreds of Matterhorns collected together, but the Matterhorn, Mont Blanc, and all the Swiss mountains would have been two or three thousand feet below me, while these mountains rose up in solemn grandeur thousands of feet above me. Not a living thing was seen and not a sound was heard; all was snow and ice and rocky precipices; while these mountains are far too grand to support anything so insignificant as trees or vegetation of any sort. They stand bold and solitary in their glory, and only permit man to come amongst them for a few months in the year; that he may admire their magnificence and go tell it to his comrades in the world beneath.

The height of the Aghil Dawan I estimate at from 16,000 to 17,000 feet. Snow was lying near the summit, on which there was also a small lake about three-quarters of a mile in circumference. The descent was rather steep, leading down towards the Shaksgam river. After one hour and a half the valley opens out, and we passed over a gravel slope which terminated abruptly in a cliff 200 feet high overhanging the Shaksgam river. We looked about in both directions to find a way down, but could see none till I noticed some tracks of Kyang, and knowing that they must get down to the river somehow in order to drink I followed them up, and found they led down a very steep and narrow watercourse. We brought up the ponics, unloaded them, threw the packs down first, and then brought down the ponics, one man leading each on in front, and two more hanging on to his tail behind. All came down without any accident, and we then followed down the broad pebbly valley of the Shaksgam river. This river, previously unknown to geographers, must be nearly equal in volume to the Yarkand river, of which it is a tributary, but instead of being compressed into one stream like the latter it spreads itself in many channels over a pebbly bed more than a mile in width. It flows down from the main Karakoram range in a direction rather west of north to the point where we struck it, where it turns off in a westerly direction. We followed it down the next day for fourteen miles to the point where it is joined by the Sarpo Laggo stream. It then flows off in a north west direction to join the Yarkand river. The Sarpo Laggo flows down from the glaciers of the Mustagh Pass through a valley from half to one mile in width. After ascending it for a few miles, we came in full view of the great peak, K 2, the second highest mountain in the world, 28,250 feet in height. We could see it through a break in the mountains rising up straight, bold, and solitary, covered from foot to summit with perpetual snow. The upper part, for perhaps 5,000 feet, was a perfect

Early next morning we started off to tackle the glacier, and here our real difficulties began, for after passing along for half a mile between the glacier and the mountain side we found the way blocked by the ice, and we could neither get our ponies round the obstacle by climbing the mountain side nor by taking them on to the glacier. So they were sent back to the end of the glacier, to wait till I had explored ahead with the guides. We plunged into the middle of the glacier, clambering about, often on all fours, amongst a jumbled mass of moraine and ice, passing cliffs of clear transparent ice and caverns composed entirely of ice, with icicles twenty and thirty feet long hanging from the roof. It was a most curious and beautiful sight. We ascended the glacier for a couple of miles and then saw it stretching ahead for many miles more. The guides thought it would be impossible to drag a caravan of ponies up it, and I decided on sending them back by the Karakoram Pass to Leh and going on over the Mustagh Pass with three men, as I had also to take into consideration that our supplies would be running short. But on returning to the caravan. I found that one of the men, who had been exploring the opposite side of the glacier, had found a way, and was gallantly leading the ponies over it, though they were knocking and tumbling about in a fearful way. Their legs were getting cut to pieces, and the loads were falling off every five minutes. It was cruel work for them, for they had no chance of keeping their footing on the slippery ice, which was usually only covered over with a thin coating of gravel. However, as a start had been made, I determined on making a renewed effort to bring them up the glacier. But they very soon got exhausted, so we halted for the day, and I then went off again with the guides to explore a route for the next day. We kept on up the east edge of the glacier, marking with small cairns the route which was best for the ponies to follow, and returned to our bivouac after dark, thoroughly exhausted tune) we may find a way." "All right," I said, and we started off back again for some distance, and then struck off right into the centre of the glacier, and ascended a prominent peak in it, from which we could get a good view all round. We were in the middle of a great sea of ice, for the glacier was four or five miles broad, and composed of pure white ice broken up into a mass of needle peaks and great glaciers came rolling down the mountain sides like clotted cream pouring out of a cream-jug. From the point on which we were standing I could see a thin line of moraine extending right up the main glacier. We got on to this and followed it up for a long way, and, to our great relief, found it would be quite possible to bring the ponies up it, and get them on to the smooth snow in which the head of the glacier is buried. On our return journey we nearly lost our way, and were wandering for some time in the dark before we managed to find it. We held a consultation of war that night as to which pass we should attack, for there are two leading out of the valley we were ascending. The old Mustagh Pass to the east had been out of use for thirty or forty years, on account of the accumulation of ice upon it, in consequence of which a new pass had been sought for, and another one to the west had been found. This latter pass had been in partial use up to ten years ago. No European had, however, crossed either of them, but Colonel Godwin Austin in 1861 came very near the summit of the new pass from the southern side, when he was obliged to turn back on account of bad weather. One of my guides had at one time taken ponies across it. I decided, therefore, to send on a couple of men to reconnoitre the new pass the next day, while the remainder of us brought on the ponies up the glacier.

Early in the morning the reconnoitrers set out, while we followed as soon as we had loaded the ponies. Our difficulties were not so great this day, and in the evening we halted on the glacier. Towards duek the two men returned from the new pa impossible to get ponies down it, and that it would even be difficult for men, as masses of ice had formed. They said the best thing to be done now was to leave the ponies where they were, under the charge of three men, and set off with the rest over the old Mustagh Pass to Askoli, the first village on the other side, send back supplies from there for the ponies and men left behind, and collect a number of coolies to try and make a passage for the ponies over the new pass. Things were getting critical now, for supplies were running short, and where we then were no fuel could be obtained, and the ponies could only feed on some few scraggy weeds which we could see across the glacier on the mountain side. So, if on the morrow the pass should prove impassable, our fate would have been a hard one, as provisions would scarcely last out till we could get back to an inhabited spot again. It was an anxious night that, and it was also a very cold one, for we were sleeping out in the middle of the glacier with a horribly cold wind blowing down it, and we only had just sufficient fuel for cooking purposes, and could not afford to keep a fire going for a moment after our evening meal was cooked. Next morning, while it was yet dark, we started for the pass, leaving everything behind, except a roll of bedding for myself, a sheepskin coat for each man, a few dry provisions, and a large tea-kettle. The ascent to the pass was quite gentle, but led over deep snow, in which we sank knee-deep at every step. We were now about 19,000 feet above the sea-level, and quickly became exhausted. In fact, as we got near the summit, we could only advance a dozen or twenty steps at a time, and we would then lean over on our alpenstocks, and gasp and pant away as if we had been running up a steep hill at a great pace. It was most tantalising, for the top looked so near, and the slope was so easy, that it seemed as if we could run up in no time. But it was not till midday that we reached the summit, and then on looking about for a way down we co sible way now of getting to the bottom was by crossing an icy slope to a cliff, which was too steep for a particle of snow to lodge on it, even in that region of ice and snow. From this we should have to descend on to some more icy slopes which could be seen below. Nobody spoke as we looked down that pass, and I waited anxiously for the rext move. I could not give an order to go ahead, for I felt incapable of going first myself. I heard them asking each other who should go first, and at last Wali—the finest fellow that ever stepped—quietly took an axe, tied a rope round his waist, and giving the end of it to us, told us to follow him. We had first to cross the icy slope; it was of smooth ice and very steep, and about thirty yards below us it ended abruptly, and we could see nothing over the edge for many hundreds of feet. As Wali hewed the steps we advanced step by step after him, leaning back against the slope, all the time facing the precipice and knowing that if we slipped (and the ice was very slippery, for the sun was just powerful enough to melt the surface of it), we should roll down the icy slope and over the precipice into eternity. Half-way across, my Tartar servant Drogpa, who had been born and bred in the heart of the Himalayas, gave up, saying he was trembling all over and could the first the surface of the steps were and could the first the surface of the steps was trembling all over and could the first the steep was trembling all over and could the first the steep was trembling all over and could the first the steep was trembling all over and could the first the steep was trembling all over and could the first the steep was trembling all over and could the first the steep was trembling all over and could the first the steep was trembling all over and could the first the steep was trembling all over and could the first the steep was trembling all over and could the first the steep was trembling all over and could the first the steep was trembling all over the precipice and the steep was trembling the Himalayas, gave up, saying he was trembling all over and could not face the precipice, so I sent him back to the ponies, which he afterwards brought round by the Karakoram Pass. After a time we reached terra firma in the shape of a projecting piece of rock, and from here began the descent of the cliff. We had to let our and from here began the descent of the chir. We had to let ourselves down from any little ledge, taking every step with the greatest possible care, as the rock was not always sound; and once a shout came from above, and a huge rock, which had been dislodged, came crashing past me and as nearly as possible hit two of the men who had already got some way down. At the bottom of the cliff we came to another steep ice-slope. We tied together every scrap of rope we had, and every turban and waistband, and then let Wali down by this on a small piece of bare rock which showed through the ice. As he went down he cut steps in the ice. He then seated himself firmly on the rock while we tied the other end of the rope on to a rock above. Then each man let himself down hanging on to the rope. One man in doing so slipped, fell over on his back and slid down at a frightful pace, still, however, clinging to the rope with one hand, which was fearfully cut by the clinging to the rope with one hand, which was rearring out by the friction. Then came the last man—he was the slave I had released at Yarkand, and how he got down has been a puzzle to me then and ever since. He tied the end of the rope round his waist, and then with the aid of an alpenstock, which he used in a most dexterous way, and the steps which had been hewn for him, he came gradually down, and as he advanced we pulled in the slack of the rope at the bottom end, so that the step which had been hewn for him, he came gradually down, and as he advanced we pulled in the slack of the rope at the bottom end, so that advanced we pulled in the slack of the rope at the bottom end, so that if he fell we could pull him up sharp. In this way we got down two more stages of the ice slope. Then came a piece where there was no suitable halting-place within the length of the rope. Luckily, however, it was less steep, and we were able to get down it by hewing steps. And at last, just as the sun set, we reached the bottom. As I looked back at the pass it seemed utterly impossible that any man could have got down such a place. (Applause.) Our troubles were not yet over, though, for we were now on a snowfield at the head of a glacier, and all round us were great mountains covered with snow and ice so we got down such a place. (Applause.) Our troubles were not yet over, though, for we were now on a snowfield at the head of a glacier, and all round us were great mountains covered with snow and ice, so we had to trudge on over the snow and glacier till after eleven at night. We frequently met with crevasses, down which one of the men fell, and as he was the last was not missed for some little time. Ordinarily we should have thought twice before going so recklessly over this glacier, but we were now so utterly tired, and so overjoyed, too, at having got over the difficulties of the pass that we pushed along in a sleepy, careless way, perfectly unmindful of the dangers of the road, till at last we came upon a dry spot where there were a few weeds. We collected these, lit a fire with the aid of them and a couple of alpenstocks, cooked some tea, and then rolled ourselves up in our wraps behind a rock and slept as only those can sleep who have done eighteen hours' continuous work of such a description as we had had to do that day. (Applause.) At daybreak next morning we were on our legs again, and after a few hours' travelling emerged on to the great Baltoro glacier, which was explored by Colonel Godwin Austen in 1861 when making the Kashmir survey, and described by him in a paper read before this Society. We travelled all that day, and for two days more, till we reached Askoli, a little village, situated on the Braldo river, where it was most refreshing seeing the trees and cultivated lands which surrounded it. I immediately set to work to collect supplies and coolies, and when this was done sent village, situated on the Braldo river, where it was most refreshing seeing the trees and cultivated lands which surrounded it. I immediately set to work to collect supplies and coolies, and when this was done sent off one party with supplies for the men and ponies I had left behind on the other side of the pass, and then started myself with another party of coolies to try and force my way back by the new Mustagh Pass. I ascended the Punmah glacier, but was brought to a standstill opposite the camping-ground of Skinmang, three days' march from Askoli, by a glacier which had rolled down from the pass. We had managed in some fashion or other to get over a good many glaciers in the passage of these mountains, but this was the most unnegotiable one of them all, for in the last four or five years large masses of ice had accumulated on it. There were great blocks of ice as big as houses tumbled about, one on the top of the other, in such utter confusion that we could not get a footing on it at all. We were obliged, therefore, to turn back to Askoli. I had given orders for the party with the ponies that if I did not reach them by a certain date after they had received the supplies they should make their way to Leh by the Karakoram Pass, under the charge of the Ladakhi servant, Drogpa, who had gone back to camp from the old Mustagh Pass. So when the coolies who had taken the supplies returned to Askoli, and brought me news of the safety of the party with the ponies, I started off for Skardo, and then through Kashmir to Rawalpindi, which I reached on Nov. 4, just seven months after leaving Peking. months after leaving Peking.

THE following is a summary of the Bombay Presidency Season report for the past week:—Rain in parts of Kurrachee, Sholapore, Belgaum, and Dharwar. Standing crops in good condition. Cotton-picking in progress in parts of Kaira, Bijapur, Belgaum, and Dharwar. Harvesting of late crops completed in Rutnagherry; still progressing in Shikarpur, Hyderabad, Upper Sind Frontier, Poona, Nasik, and Khandeish. Ploughing operations for next season's crops in progress generally throughout the Presidency.

THE recent statement in a Bengal paper, which has made the round of the Indian Press, to the effect that the mother of the Maharajah Jotendra Mohun Tagore presented the Countess of Dufferin with a pearl necklace of great value when the latter paid her a visit a few days before her departure from Calcutta is, the Madras Mail learns, quite unfounded.

IT appears to be doubtful whether Gorakhpur will be abandoned as a military cantonment. Having regard to the proposed retention of the Gurkha recruiting depot at Gorakhpur and the necessity that may possibly hereafter arise for the location of troops on the Nepaul frontier, it would appear advisable to retain the cantonment for the present under military control.

Various rumours have been afloat of a great camp of exercise to be held at Delhi during next cold weather. No such project has even been broached yet, and the shortness of money makes even the annual reliefs on the ordinary scale almost impossible, let alone launching into a camp of exercise.

ARMY GYMNASTICS.

A revision of the Gymnastic Instruction Staff in India having taken place the Governor-General in Council is pleased to notify the following changes, with effect from October 28

-The appointment of Inspector of Gymnasia in India is abolished.

II.—The Inspecting Staff will comprise one officer for the Bengal Presidency, to be styled "Inspector of Gymnasia in Bengal," on a Staff salary of Rs. 400 a month (to have effect from June 29, 1887), and one officer for Madras and Bombay, on a Staff salary of Rs.300 per mensem, to be designated "Inspector of Gymnasia, Madras and Bombay Presidencies." The present Assistant Inspector of Gymnasia at Poona will hold the latter appointment without any increase of his Staff pay. The officer in Bengal will be considered the senior officer, to whom all administrative questions affecting the other Presidencies will be referred, and through whom all returns for the Adjutant-General in India, or for the home authorities, will be forwarded.

III.—The travelling allowance at present sanctioned, viz. :-

Rs. For Bengal ... For Bombay ... 2,000 is readjusted as follows:-For Bengal ... 1,200 For Bombay and Madras ... 1.200

The office allowance for the Inspector of Gymnasia in Bengal will remain, as at present, at Rs. 100 per mensem, and the allowance for the Inspector of Gymnasia, Madras and Bombay Presidencies increased from Rs. 50 to Rs. 75 a month.

V.—All other allowances will remain as at present.

VI.—The duties of the Inspector of Gymnasia in Bengal will be confined to supervising the schools at Umballa and Lucknow, and inspecting the regimental gymnasia in the Bengal Presidency. The Inspector for the Madras and Bombay Presidency will have his headquarters at Poona, will supervise the schools at that station and Secunderbad, and will inspect the regimental gymnasia in these Presidencies.

VII.—Non-Commissioned Staff.—There will be no change in the staff of the four sergeant instructors now employed at in the staff of the four sergeant instructors now employed at the schools of Umballa, Lucknow, Poona, and Secunderabad, who will continue to draw their present Staff salaries; but five assistant sergeant instructors are sanctioned in addition to the present establishment of seven assistant instructors. These twelve assistant sergeant instructors will receive an uniform rate of Rs. 18 per mensen, as Staff pay, and they will be appointed as required from regiments located at the stations at which the schools are, their regimental pay being borne by the regiments to which they belong.

Mr. Toulmin, the Superintendent of Telegraphs at Indore, has issued a circular, the result of which might be disastrous to the public. He has ordered all telegraph masters to use the same old diseased grass khuskus tatties of last year, and visitors to the offices are simply on entering prostrated with the offensive smell. He has also ordered that last year's tin mugs for watering tatties are to be used.

THE Maharajah Holkar has several times talked of making over the administration of the state to his mother, assisted by his uncle, Sir Kasirao Dada and Buxi Kuman Singh; and his Highness once drew up a paper to this effect, but never signed it. Rumours that some such arrangement is again in conit. Rumours that some such arrangement is again in contemplation have been circulated, but even if effected, it is not likely that it will last long. Buxi Kuman Singh is in very nfirm health, and Kasirao Dada is thoroughly distrusted, his manager in Khargon having been removed a fortnight ago by the peremptory orders of Sir Lepel Griffin, as a notorious bad character and friend of dacoits, especially the followers of Tantia, whose raids he protected. The Maharajah Holkar is trying to find a Dewan in Bombay, but the failure of Raghunath Rao will probably prevent any good man taking office.

RUSSIA AND AFGHANISTAN.

There are, writes the Odessa correspondent of the Daily News, persistent rumours among the subordinate officials in the public departments and in the military staff quarters here of some movement being prepared against Afghanistan. I have been unable to trace the reports to any particular source. They are confined to official and military circles, where there is an apparent fear of being indiscreet in the discounter of what we have the source of what we have the source of what we have the source of th curcies, where there is an apparent tear of being indiscreet in the discretision of what may be the secret information of the military chief of the southern provinces. My own opinion, based upon various information gathered from authoritative sources, is that Russia may perhaps be preparing such a demonstration in Central Asia as a means of coercing the only Power which is likely to oppose her in settling the coercing the only Power which is likely to oppose her in settling the Bulgarian question in her own way.

The Vienna Correspondent of the Daily Telegraph says:—It would be rash to speak with confidence respecting the outlook in Central Asia. All intelligence received from St. Petersburg within the last ten days strengthens the suspicion that some fresh coup is in course of preparation there. The expost of Russia's policy in that part of the world just published by General Sobeleff is by no means calculated to allay apprehensions. It is edifying to be told, on the authority of General Sobeleff, that the opening of the new railroad to Samarcand is the beginning of the end, and that the end itself will be the coming campaign against India.

In looking back to the events of last autumn, when I ventured to criticise the much lauded results of the Afghan boundary negotiations by predicting that Russia's indulgence will last only as long as her railway to Samarcand is unfinished, I might well allude to the attack and cruel onslaught made against me in certain English papers for my not agrecing with the then reigning official views. But I will rather abstain from recriminations, for it is not the first, and, I am afraid, not the last, time that I have been unjustly ridiculed, and that ironic smiles last, time that I have been unjustly ridiculed, and that ironic smiles and frowns have been so liberally, and, as recent events show, so unworthily bestowed upon my writings.

THE students of the Madras Christian College still maintain an attitude of absolute defiance to the College authorities. They have held a meeting in a Temple in Black Town, and passed a series of resolutions, with one of which, requesting a passed a series of resolutions, with one of which, requesting a guarantee that the Professors shall use no undue influence for the conversion of students to Christianity, we can (says the Pioneer) have no fault to find, but the others of which evince a spirit of rank insubordination, that is, always presuming there was no extraordinary cause to justify the students' original outbreak. It is worth noting that tracts claiming to prove the superiority of Hinduism over other religions were circulated at the meeting. This looks as if our surmise that something in it. something in it.

THE Director-General of the Post-Office, who accompanies the Government to Simla, has this year arranged to leave more than half of his office establishment in Calcutta, thereby effecting a saving of some two thousand rupees a month. While the Director-General is in Simla, the office in Calcutta has been placed in charge of Mr. L. Massa, the Secretary to the Director-General, and in these days of rapid communication there seems to be no reason why a similar arrangement should not be adopted in other departments.

SIR CHARLES AITCHISON'S retirement from the Civil Service does not bring him any increase of emolument. In terms of the statutory law, the pay of a Member of Council, who so retires, is reduced by the amount of his pension. In other words, Sir Charles Aitchison will draw no pension until he resigns the office altogether.

Mr. Hugh May, Confidential Secretary to Sir Lepel Griffin, MR. HUGH MAY, Conndential Secretary to Sir Lepel Grimn, has been permitted to return to duty on his arrival from England. He will not, it is said, revert to his appointment, but will be appointed Assistant Superintendent of Police in the Indore and Mhow section of the Rajputana-Malwa Railway. During his tenure of office as Confidential Secretary to the Agent to the Governor-General, Mr. May has shown much ability, and Sir Lepel's acknowledgment of his services, if he has nominated him to the new post, is well deserved.

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its still of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opons its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

TO THE UBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF INDIA

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing monthly (in Sombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian teeple.

ing between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian veople.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

THE CALCUTTA REVIEW.

(The only Quarterly Review in India.)

ESTABLISHED 1844.

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October roached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it. there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Etatesnan, October 1886.

.... The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name —J. W. KAYE, Athenseum Club, June 23, 1872.

The Calcutta R view has given us valuable articles on the army. Scn e from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophesy, of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.— Address of the C.-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

. . . . The Calcutta Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its wel-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westmineter Review.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 18th May; from Allahabad and Madras to the 16th May; and from Calcutta to the 15th May.

THE Nizam's Government has served Sirdar Diler Jung with a notice, repudiating the purchase of the Deccan Mining Company's shares, and calling on him to repay £151,631.

SIRDAR DILER JUNG has offered to refund the money invested by the Hyderabad Government in the Deccan Mining shares, provided that no steps be taken against him, and that the concession to the company is not cancelled. His Highness declined to accept the money on these terms.

NEWS from Chittagong states that the Shendus, who killed Lieutenant Stewart, have made another raid into British territory, and attacked a guard on the Sangu river.

THE bodies of Lieutenants Williams and O'Dowda, who were killed near Leppagyn, have been recovered.

THE Chins have disappeared from the neighbourhood of Indin. Our forces hold the dowager Queen and other members of the Royal family as hostages.

THE Northern and Eastern Divisions of Burma are very quiet. The Central district continues disturbed.

THE men of the first North Irish Division of R.A. have received the Burma medal and clasp.

THE reinforcement sent hence to Chindwin and the Kubo Valley number 800, with two guns and 200 Mounted Infantry. They are marching to retake Indin, where Kale Sawbwa was captured by Chins.

THE financial results for 1887-8 are put down as more than three lakes better than the revised estimates of March last.

THE whole of Ayoub Khan's party, after landing at Karachi, have proceeded to Rawal Pindi.

THE Rance of his Highness the Gaekwar gave birth to a son at Ootacamund on the 12th May.

THE whole of the Sikkim Field Force is to be rationed to the end of June, and the 32nd Pioneers to the end of the rains.

THE AMIR is reported to be sending additional troops to Jellalabad to assist in the expedition against the independent tribes north of the Kabul River.

THE report telegraphed by the Pioneer's London correspondent regarding the complications on the Herat frontier remains uncorroborated by any intelligence received up to date in India from that quarter.

A STATEMENT has been made that two regiments from India are to be sent to garrison Suakin. It is now asserted that there is no foundation for the statement-

THERE are not likely to be any movements of Horse Artillery or British cavalry in the next relief.

THE death has occurred of Mr. Dangerfield, Agent for Government Consignments at Calcutta.

THE LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR OF BENGAL was to leave |

Calcutta by special train on May 18, but will not arrive in Darjiling until the 25th, as his Honour intends paying a visit to the Sikkim Field Force at Gnatong. The usual Queen's Birthday Ball was to take place in Darjiling on Monday, the 28th May.

THE question of the publication of the Finance Committee's Report will soon be decided. The opinions of the Local Governments on the point are at present under consideration; and all the papers will shortly go before the Viceroy for final orders.

THE insignia of K.C.S.I. has arrived for the decoration of his Highness the Ellia Rajah of Cochin. The British Resident at Trevandrum, it is expected, will proceed to Cochin to decorate his Highness.

THE junior Maharani of Burdwan is dead. By her death the Raj passes to her adopted son and the Burdwan family disappears.

DEPUTY SURGEON-GENERAL HEWLETT has resigned the Sanitary Commissionership of the Bombay Presidency, and Surgeon-Major MacRury has been appointed to suc-

THE age of twenty-three has been fixed as the limit at which officers from British Regiments can enter the Native

ORDERS bearing upon the reorganisation of the Judge Advocate-General's Department will shortly issue. There will be material reductions in the strength of the department, the work in the various circles being redistributed.

RECENT telegrams have shown that the outbreak of dacoity in Tavoy was something more than a mere chance outcrop of lawlessness. It is now officially stated that papers have been captured which, it is hoped, may throw light upon the origin of the disturbance both at Tavoy and Akvab.

Akyab.

THE report on the Ruby Mines which Mr. Barrington Browne has just submitted to the Government of India is a short preliminary one only. His full account will be given in to the Secretary of State when he gets home. Mr. Browne goes back with a robust belief in the mineral wealth of Upper Burma.

THE Maharaja of Cashmere has submitted to the Resident the names of Dr. Surujbal and Babu Nilumber Mookerji, wishing to appoint them as advisers to the Durbar. Mr. Plowden has objected to the nomination.

SIR DONALD MACKENZIE WALLACE has, under instructions from his Excellency the Viceroy, presented the members of the Mahomedan Literary Society of Calcutta with framed portraits of Lord and Lady Dufferin.

THE period of Sir Salar Jung's exile from Hyderabad has expired. He will probably return there shortly.

To-day's mail (May 18th) is the last of the Friday mails until after the monsoon. Beginning with next Tuesday, the homeward mail will, until further notice, leave Bombay on Tuesday of each week.

SIR CHARLES AITCHISON leaves India for good at the end of the Simla season.

THE Calcutta Municipal Bill has been passed by the Bengal Legislative Council.

ORITUARY:—Captain Judge at Dagshai.

Mr. Ribbentrop, the Inspector-General of Forests, takes furlough within a couple of months or so, and Lieutenant-Colonel Bailey, who has before acted as Inspector-General, will probably do so again on this occasion.

NOTES.

THE report that Lord Dufferin will leave India for good earlier than was at first anticipated is now going the round of the Indian newspapers, but no official confirmation of the rumour has appeared. It was his Excellency's intention to leave Simla in the autumn and pay a flying visit to Kashmir before starting for England, and no modification of this intention has yet been announced.

SIR CHARLES AITCHISON proposes, on account of the state of his health, to resign his appointment and return to England at the end of the Simla season.

THE cost incurred by the Government of India for the maintenance of Ayub Khan and the rest of the Afghan prisoners amounts, it is said, to upwards of five lacs of supees yearly.

THE Times of India is not cheerful with regard to the decline of the rupee. It says:—"Sterling exchange is now simplicity itself, and calculators are almost superfluous. Sixteen pence are equivalent to sixteen annas, or an anna to a penny. We have reached this point by a steady fall of about 1-32 each day since last mail day, but where we shall be next week it is impossible to foretell. This position is a serious one to all, especially to the Government of India. Their 35 lakhs of bills only fetched on Wednesday 16:08 pence per rupee, Calcutta taking nine-tenths of them. Next week again 35 lakhs are to be offered. To remitters it means a serious loss, and industries that have to get machinery and stores out from England must suffer considerably. Bar silver has declined to 42d. per ounce, at which it is reported weak. The shipments do not increase in proportion to the fall in price. The rupee is very sick to-day beyond a doubt, but many consider a further slight fall certain to come, even low as it is now."

ACCORDING to the news which comes to hand to-day in the Indian papers by the Overland Mail the Nizam's Government appears to have thrown Abdul Huq completely over. One paper says that the Sirdar is surrounded by astrologers and professors of the occult sciences, but it thinks that the poor man is likely to need all the help that these can give him, with the help of the lawyers who have been retained in the case thrown in too.

THE following official note has been issued from Simla: "The Government of India has not received intelligence from Herat confirming what has been telegraphed to India of the Jamshedis declaring for Russia; but news was lately received of Sarites on the boundary requiring the presence of General Alikhanoff. It is probable that his departure from Penjdeh in connection with the Sarites has given rise to the report about the Gaindhalis."

contracts will be, if the suggestions are accepted, Ra.69,01,000. Secondly, the Committee has made a large number of recommendations with regard to provincial expenditure, which have not yet been accepted by the local Governments or by the Maimena, and the people concerned were the Salors, and not the Jamshedis. A party of the latter raided into Afghan territory, and induced some Salor families to return with them. The Afghans objected, and a detachment of Sowars followed and arrested the fugitives, who, however, were rescued by reinforcements, the Sowars thereupon returning to Maimena, and the Salors into Russian territory. No violence seems to have been employed. The Afghans did not consider the incident of sufficient importance to report it.

Mr. Griesbach, who went some months ago to Cabul to prospect for coal, gold, and precious stones on behalf of the Ameer, has been treated most kindly, not only by his Highness, but all Afghans with whom he has come in contact. Mr. Griesbach has travelled much about the country, and has been everywhere received most hospitably by all classes. Hostility to Englishmen appears to be a thing of Afghan frontier occurred not in the direction of Herat, but Maimena, and the people concerned were the Salors, and followed and arrested the fugitives, who, however, were rescued by reinforcements, the Sowars thereupon returning to Maimena, and the Salors into Russian territory.

the past in Afghanistan, if one may judge by the reception given to the Afghan Boundary Commission, to Mr. Pynes, and now to Mr. Griesbach.

A HYDERABAD telegram to the Bombay papers states that Mr. Inversity has gone to England in Abdul Huq's interests on a fee of Rs. 60,000 for three months. The Nizam's Government have served notice on Abdul Huq of their repudiation of the purchase of shares in the Deccan Mining Company made by him last year, and demanding of him repayment of £158,631, the price paid for 12,500 shares. This sum includes £18,750, the balance of the call due on 3,750 half-paid shares, which amount was drawn by Huq after his return to India. The repudiation is made on the ground that Abdul Huq concealed from the Nizam's Government the fact that he was interested in the company, and that the shares partially purchased were Abdul Huq's own property. The Minister's proposed visit to Simla has been abandoned for the present, owing to Nawab Mehdi Ali's absence.

THE latest report regarding cholera in Kashmir, dated Srinagar, May 11th, states that 123 new cases and 63 deaths had occurred in the city during the previous twenty-three hours. The sanitation of the "Happy Valley" appears to be as much neglected as that of the Presidency towns.

THE National Guardian learns from a reliable source that there is no truth in the rumour of an Urdu instructor being deputed to England to teach that language to Her Majesty the Queen, and that the Nawab Laigam ud Dowla has been the victim of a cruel hoax at the hands of a more than ordinarily cute enemy.

CALCUTTA, JUNE 3

The report of the Finance Commission has just been pub hed. The amount of the savings recommended is 128 lakhs, lished. The amount of the savings recommended is 128 lakhs, of which 69 lakhs represent the saving to be effected in the provincial contracts. Various economies are suggested. First as to the provincial contracts. In the Punjab the revenue and expenditure are only just in equilibrium. In Burma the finances are disturbed, and the only arrangement possible is a provisional renewal of the contracts for a short period. The North-West Provinces can surrender Rs.12,65,000 of revenue to the Imperial Treasury, the Central Provinces, Rs.12,85,000, Bombay, Rs.17,00,000, Madras, Rs.14,07,000, Bengal, Rs.11,52,000, and Assam, Rs.1,86,000. The total gain to the general finances of the State by the renewal of the provincial contracts will be, if the suggestions are accepted, Rs.69,01,000. Secondly, the Committee has made a large number of recommendations with regard to provincial expenditure, which have exceptional capacity, the Dewan Raghunath Rao, who has done everything in his power to secure a well-ordered administration. Sir L. Griffin also comments upon the unsatisfactory condition of Bhopal. The disturbing element which had already caused the Government so much trouble is as active as ever while the libely published upon the Minister. which had already caused the Government so much trouble is as active as ever, while the libels published upon the Minister and the Government are instigated from Bhopal and paid for by persons residing there, and dangerously weaken the Minister's authority. Unless the guilty authors of these forgeries and libels are punished the Minister's position must become before long quite untrouble.

The young Maharajah of Rewah has been removed from the demoralising influences of the zenana and placed under responsible guardianship. The boy's health and character are greatly improved, but the Maharanee has made this action a ground of complaint, and has withdrawn from Rewah. Bangalore fout has been made over to the Maharajah of Mysore Jore fort has been made over to the Maharajah of Mysore.

The Maharajah of Oodeypore offers six lakhs for the defence of the frontier, together with the service of his troops. On the question of the utilisation of this offer the views of the Lieutenant-Governor are awaited.

The arming of the British troops in India with the magazine rifle will be followed by the distribution of Martini-Henry rifles to Native troops.

The new Walter Hospital at Oodeypore was opened by the Resident in state on the Queen's birthday. In the course of a speech the Dewan said it was very gratifying that on so auspicious a day as that of the birthday of the Empress the work commenced by Ledy Dufferin should be completed by a work commenced by Lady Dufferin should be completed by a crowning achievement.

At the last criminal sessions, after a long trial, a Bengalee youth of good position was found guilty of murdering his father, a well-known doctor practising in Calcutta. Parricide is a crime almost unknown among Hindoos, and this trial has therefore created a feeling of profound horror, especially among the more conservative sections of the Hindoos. These man have been complaining bittelly for some time of the among the more conservative sections of the Hindoos. These men have been complaining bitterly for some time of the demoralising influences of the present system of education. While the ethical sanctions of the Hindoo religion are being loosened or destroyed by a purely secular and scientific education, no precepts, either religious or moral, are permitted to take their place. The urgency of social reform in this and other respects is becoming day by day a question of paramount interest to that portion of the Hindoo community which views with dread the growing immorality of the younger generation, and this case has had the effect of focusing Native opinion on the subject. Sentence has not yet been propounced as a point the subject. Sentence has not yet been pronounced, as a point of law was reserved.

SIKKIM AND TIBET.

CALCUTTA, JUNE 3.

There appears to be no immediate prospect of a peaceful settlement of our quarrel with Tibet, and there are indications in many directions, that a further attack, on a more extensive scale, is in contemplation. The late defeat, instead of acting as an inducement to sue for peace, would seem, on the contrary, to have had the effect of stimulating the Tibetan authorities to adopt an attitude of irreconcileable hostility. The latest telegraphic despatch states that for several the Tibetan authorities to adopt an attitude of irreconcileable hostility. The latest telegraphic despatch states that for several days large numbers of the enemy have been seen crossing and recrossing the Jalep Pass. They have erected a fort, surrounded with high stone walls, on rising ground in the centre of the valley leading up to the Jalep Pass, within a few yards of the road. A little below the fort a wall has been erected across the road. Large numbers of tents are visible over the top of the Jalep Pass. The Tibetan leaders have been massing their forces in the Kapup Valley, and are apparently meditating a night attack.

Further details have been published of the recent attack on Further details have been published of the recent attack on our encampment. By 6.15 A.M. the enemy had to a certain extent vacated the exposed slopes of the Tukola, and had worked round to the exposed stopes of the Tukola, and had worked round to the end of the Jungly ridge to the north of the camp. Here several men crept through the wood upon a picket of the Sherwood Foresters (Derbyshire Regiment), which retired, but not before it had shot the Tibetan leader, a giant of 6ft. 7in. The Tibetans now came down in large numbers on the north-eastern face of the camp, where it was defended by some of the Discourse of the camp, where it was audiers on the north-eastern face of the camp, where it was defended by some of the Pioneers and by a company of the Derbyshire Regiment. The assailants crept through the jungle, availing themselves admirably of cover and rarely exposing themselves in the slightest degree, until they had occupied a front of some 500 yards, within a distance from our entrenchment of from 200 to 500 yards. Here they opened a very hot fire from both rifles and matchlocks, and dropped slugs and bullets among our ranks and through our texts. One man bullets among our ranks and through our tents. One man crept up to within 300 yards of our position and kept up for at least half-an-hour a most galling though ineffectual fire, completely enfilleding one face of our camp. It required a round of case and a section of Pioneers to dislodge him.

At about seven o'clock the fire from a wooded hill in front had become so heavy that a half-company of the Derbyshire Regiment, under Lieutenant Iggulden, was sent round to endeavour to take the men holding it in flank. The halfcompany worked right round the valley, and became there very hotly engaged, losing Sergeant Leckington, who was here shot through the head. This diversion had the effect of checking the Tibetans' fire, or at least of obliging them to retire up the hills. At this point, too, they seemed to lose a good many men killed and wounded. At about 8.30 the enemy was inclined to retreat, and another half-company of the Derbyshire. Regiment and a party of the 32nd went out under Captain Gosset. These detachments, joining hands with the remainder of the Derbyshire Regiment, worked up the valley between the hill, driving before them the now retiring enemy, and accounting for a great many among the trees and jungle.

The Tibetans were now in full retreat, and as they crossed the Tukola they were fired into by the guns, which made admirable practice at 2,500 yards, bursting a shrapnel shell among a large party of spectators, including a gentleman on a black horse; who dismounted with much haste. Our troops took some ten or twelve prisoners, mostly badly wounded; and the enemy's loss must be close upon 200 in killed and wounded, for they were pursued for nearly two miles by the Derbyshire Regiment and by Colonel Bromhead's Sikhs. Our loss amounted to three men killed and eight wounded. The prisoners stated that 2,300 men had started at nine o'clock on the previous evening. The men engaged were nearly without exception soldiers of splendid physique, powerfully built and well fed. They are believed to be the flower of the Tibetan army, and many came from Chumboo, beyond Lhassa. The whole of the road from the Tukola to Nimla is strewn with the arms, blankets, and bundles of the retreating force.

The prisoners allege that the immediate cause of the attack was a letter addressed to the leaders, informing them that the oracle of Naitoang, near Lhassa, had prophesied victory if wounded, for they were pursued for nearly two miles by the

was a letter addressed to the leaders, informing them that the oracle of Naitoang, near Lhassa, had prophesied victory if the attack were delivered between the 11th and 15th days of the third Tibetan month, corresponding with the 21st and 25th of May. After a council of war, the force accordingly marched on the following evening in two bodies, one by the Jalep and the other by the Pembyring Pass. Having reached the low Tokola ridge, between Gnatong and the Jalep, the Tibetans formed into three columns, one being directed make a front attack and the other two to advance along the

The election of the Teshu Lama is said to have taken place in last February. His headquarters are at the monastery of Krashis Lunpo, in Further Tibet. He wields equal nominal authority with the Dalai Lama, at Lhassa.

BURMA.

RANGOON, JUNE 2.

Full details have been received of the recent attack on Mogoung. The dacoits who attacked the town were Shans from the Upper Chindwin, not Kachyens, as was originally reported. The firing was of a very obstinate character, and lasted for several hours. The Ghoorkha policemen, numbering seventy-five, under Lieutenant O'Donnell and Lieutenant. ing seventy-five, under Lieutenant O'Donnell and Lieutenant. Elliott, Assistant-Commissioner, fought splendidly. Although outnumbered by six to one, they drove the dacoits from several strong positions held by them in walled pagodas. The Shans resisted with great obstinacy, and the fighting was frequently hand to hand, the Shans crossing their spears with the bayonets of the police. Nearly one-third of the Goorkhas engaged were killed or wounded, our loss being eight men killed and fifteen wounded. The dacoits' loss was very heavy. In addition to forty-nine men killed it is estimated that more than 100 were wounded. A fresh attack on Mogoung by Kachyens is now enticipated. is now anticipated.

The Queen-mother, Princess Soopayagyee, the elder sister of Soopayalat, and an Alompra Prince, have arrived in Rangoon from Mergui in the Enterprise. They will proceed to India, but their precise destination is not announced. The local Government took great precautions to conceal their arrival. The Enterprise was for some days in the port before it was generally known that they were on board.

More disturbances near Tavoy are reported. The recently appointed Myoke or subordinate magistrate of Nabulay has been murdered. The previous Myoke of Nabulay was murdered by dacoits. During the recent disturbances the telegraph wire to Tavoy was cut, and the local Government at once sent a steamer with reinforcements of military police to Tavoy.

Mr. Powell, an officer of the Survey Department, was murdered by Burmans on the 27th of May in the Shan hills at the village of Salmin, to the west of Fort Stedman. Details are wanting.

The last official bulletin for Upper Burma reports several affairs in which the military police have successfully engaged the dacoits. The gangs are being vigorously pursued and attacked. In the Tsagain district seven dacoities have occurred, in one of which forty-five houses were burned. The Yau district was also disturbed by dacoits. The Chindwin and Kyoukse districts are reported to be quiet.

The Chief Commissioner will shortly proceed to Upper

The Chins have almost all retreated to their hills, after looting some villages, murdering a few persons, and carrying off twenty-seven captives. None of our columns have come off twenty-seven captives. None of our columns have come in contact with them.

On the approach of the mounted infantry to Chingay, a village which was held in some force by the so-called Seiwaygyobin Prince, the rebels retreated rapidly to the hills, whither it was considered unadvisable to follow them at this season, and the troops will return.

General Low is making arrangements for the protection of the frontier, as the Toshow (Chin) tribe is clearly proved to have broken faith, and to have made an unprovoked attack on our territory. A punitive expedition will probably be sent against them during the next season of cold weather.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS

THE LATE MR. DALGLEISH.

The Civil and Military Gazette publishes the following short sketch of the late Mr. A. Dalgleish's work as told by Mr. T. Russell, once his partner in his Central Asian trading

The sad and untimely close of Mr. Andrew Dalgleish's useful and brave career as the pioneer of commerce with Eastern Turkestan will not only be felt by his family and friends as a great calamity, but by every person interested in the development of England's commerce with Central Asia, and regret that so good and honourable a career should have been terminated by the hand of a vile assassin.

In 1874, when I was at home in Scotland, Mr. Dalgleish was just recovering from the effects of a very sever accident which of one of the large vessels of a shipping company in Glasgow engaged in the China trade.

The captain's boat fell from its fastening and fractured his shoulder, and he was left at Yokohama in Japan for one year under medical treatment. The wound never healed properly nearly had been should be a solution and the should be a solution. until his arrival at Edinburgh, when he had the shoulder again cut open and various small pieces of bone extracted. This so frightened his mother that she begged of me to take him with me to India, and to make him my companion on my journey to Yazkand.

This arrangement was carried out, and Mr. Dalgleish and myself left Jullundur en route for Yarkand in June, 1874; and we were four months on the journey before we entered that city.

Mr. Dalgleish, on many trying occasions during this journey, acted the part of a good and noble-minded man. He also proved to me that he had that true spirit of commercial enterprise which enabled him in after-years many times to brave the prise which enabled him in after-years many times to brave the cold and hardship of a journey over the entire range of the Himalayas in the interest of his trading ventures.

Mr. Dalgleish spoke Turki, Persian, and Urdu fluently; he had also the happy knack of favourably impressing every one with whom he conversed; and the Kirghiz of the Karakash Valley, the men of Wakhan, the Bots and Argoons of Ladak, found in him a kind and true friend, ready to give them food or medicine in their sickness, or to rough it with them when their camp was for days and and weeks pitched upon snow and ice.

The Chinese also showed him every respect; and he was ever made a welcome guest amongst them on his periodical return from Kashmir, or the Punjab, to Eastern Turkestan. He possessed, in a remarkable degree, that gift of patience in dealing with the various races of people he encountered during our journey which I could never hope to acquire.

He was a good, affectionate, and obedient son to his parents. His early career—first as midshipman, and then as second officer on board of a merchantman—taught him the use of the sextant; and I have seen him go out of a moonlight night in the court-yard of the old custom-house in Yarkand city, and take the latitude of that place so correctly as to merit the approval of the late Mr. Shaw, the Government of India's representative with Amir Yakub Beg, when it was found, on comparing notes, that they had both, with a very slight difference, arrived at the same calculations.

Mr. Dalgleish carried with him a kit of engraving tools, and the work he had done in his leisure moments showed that if he could obtain no other employment he might fall back

When we left India for Eastern Turkestan I had in my charge a most useful consignment of medicines of every kind to permit me to administer simple remedies in cases of sickness or hurt to any of the caravan people, or the inhabitants of the country we passed through; and it was wonderful to see the number of people who would asked to be cured of ophthalmia, goitre, and dreadful sores originating from the filthy state in which the people along our route lived. In the city of Yarkand I have seen thousands of people assembled at the city of the people assembled as the people the gateway of our residence, fighting and screaming to let them in to obtain medicine for their various ailments. Their faith in Mr. Dalgleish or myself being able to do so was simply marvellous, so much so that I have seen them climb the walls of the "Zagat-Khanah" and lower the patient in a basket from the roof into the court-yard where Mr. Dalgleish or myself were sitting dispensing medicine. In this work Mr. Dalgleish was quite in his element.

gleish was quite in his element.

One afternoon, a poor Yarkandi villager, while cutting a water-melon, allowed the knife to pass through the fruit and sever the arteries of the palm of his hand. His friend brought him to me to be healed. On removing the ligature tied around his arm the blood spurted out in jets, and frightened both Mr. Dalgleish and myself a little. This was a wound we could hardly attempt to heal; and Doctor Scully, Residency Surgeon, was, along with Mr. Shaw, coming from Kashgar, and could not reach Yarkand city for some days. Mr Dalgleish took the man's case into his own hands—he encircled the hand with a nexte of flour and poured some boiling oil upon the wound the man's case into his own hands—he encircled the hand with a paste of flour and poured some boiling oil upon the wound. The poor Yarkandi fainted clean away, and it took us some considerable time to bring him to his senses again. This primitive system of surgery, however, saved the man's life, as as it stopped the bleeding; and when Doctor Scully arrived in Yarkand he took him under his treatment, and eventually healed the man. I mention this episode in our attempts to heal the various people who called upon us for treatment in their sickness. their sickness, to show the character and resource of Mr. Dalgleish at a time when a man's life depended upon the assistance he could render him; and Dalgleish was equal to in the bazaars of Central Asia.

I may slightly differ with Mr. Dalgleish in my views of a large trade intercourse with Central Asia via Yarkand, on account of the serious physical difficulties encountered in transporting the goods from the Punjab, over the Himalayas, into Eastern Turkestan or the Western Khanates of Central Asia; but no English merchant should close his eyes to the fact that, unless some one like Mr. Dalgleish will run the risk of encountering and overcoming these difficulties—in establishing a market for the sale of English piece goods, Indian teas, &c., in the markets of Central Asia—Russian merchants will oust us from the field, and be the sole occupants of these markets.

In a brief review like this it is simply impossible to define the character and energy of such a man as Mr. Dalgleish, who has paid the penalty with his life in prosecuting, to a successful issue, the introduction of English manufactures and other produce across our frontier. If what he has so nobly and successfully carried out, so far single-handed, is pushed forward with the same zeal and energy by those who may follow in his footsteps, they may, when looking upon his lonely resting place at Leh, in Ladak, truly say: Here rests a man who sacrificed his life to advance the interest of his country's commerce.

DR. VINCENT RICHARDS'S REMINISCENCES OF INDIAN SNAKES.

Dr. Vincent Richards, who had lately a narrow escape from death from the bite of a cobra, with which he was experimenting, has been spared to publish in a Calcutta paper some interesting reminiscences of his experience with snakes. He writes:-

A LARGE COLLECTION.

My collection has at times included no fewer than one hun-My collection has at times included no fewer than one hundred cobras of various species, every one of which it was necessary for me to handle periodically to extract the venom for experimental purposes. My collections were not always a source of satisfaction to my neighbours. I recollect that the residents of that pretty little station, Bancoorah (excuse my un-Hunterian style, but I prefer to write it as I knew the old place), declared that my snake-pit was a positive nuisance, and acted as a "draw" for all the snakes in the district. But then they were prejudiced witnesses. they were prejudiced witnesses.

STRANGE PETS.

It was not from any feeling of love for the reptiles that I became fairly proficient in handling them; but having, some twenty-two years ago, at the desire of Sir Joseph (then Dr.) Fayrer, to whom I was introduced by Mr. John Peter Grant, C.S., entered into the field of research which brought me in constant contact with the creatures, I naturally became more and more familiar with, and, perhaps, less afraid of them. Miss Hopley goes into raptures over her "pet" snakes, but while this weakness is permissible to the tender female heart, I must confess that the man who can give expression to maudlin sentiment in praise of such an unintelligent brute as a snake is, to my mind—well, suffering from mental hebetude. Children sometimes choose strange pets. In Brazil the poisonous lizard, helioderma, is the object of their affectionate attention. My elder boy took a most inordinate liking to a golden tree snake. He fondled, fed, and exhibited it with considerable satisfaction to himself and to the horror of his smaller freinds, and the Natives, to whom a snake is a snake, whether it possesses deadly qualifications or not. One day the snake was missing, but its whereabouts was soon made known by the repeated efforts a crow was making to carry away something from a tree in the compound: that something turned out to be the "pet," which was promptly captured and pocketed. On another occasion it escaped from his pocket, and was making its way up the next wall to the roof, but was again captured and pocketed. But at last it, "was found" missing, and was found in such a "questionable shape" that my boy declined to pocket it any more. To borrow a metaphor from from Mr. Buckland, an "odour," as my little girl expressed it, directed our attention to the ceiling-cloth, and on investigation revealed the fact that its wandering habits had brought the "pet" to grief. What the crow had failed to do a rat or a mongoose had accomplished.

AN EXPERIENCE WITH A LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR.

Notwithstanding one instinctive dislike for snakes, there is a fascination about handling them, when anything like proficiency is attained, that is difficult to explain, except, perhaps, on the uncomplimentary assumption that the awe and astonishment it excites on-lookers are peculiarly pleasing to the vanity of the manipulator. A most amusing instance of the horror some people have of venomous snakes is the following:—A certain Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal had expressed a wish to see the collection of snakes which was in my charge. While I was engaged in conducting a series of investigations on the appointed day, the Lieutenant-Governor came, accompanied by several gentlemen, all wearing the most solemn air of official decorum—officialism starched and ironed out. After the usual preliminaries and the demonstration of the means of extracting the venom, I, unthinkingly, began to throw on the floor two or three of the most lively cobras, with a view to showing with what rapidity I could recapture them. Now, I hope if this meets the eye of any gentleman who was present on that occasion that he will forgive me for recording that the recollection of the scene which immediately followed my innocent proceeding has often since afforded me infinite amusement. I certainly refrained from giving expression to my feelings, partly out of politenesss, but chiefly, I fear, from a dread that any hints on my part might have given rise to the supposition that I had acted deliberately from some facetious motive; in fact, that I was perpetrating a practical joke—a dangerous amusement for a subordinate to indulge in, when at the expense of a Lieutenant-Governor; even though he were much more magnanimous than the one to whom I refer.

THEY STOOD NOT ON THE ORDER OF THEIR GOING.

But to return to the story. That room contained only one small door, and my visitors were many. It was physically impossible, therefore, that all could get through the doorway at one and the same time, but, strangely enough, the attempt was made. It seemed as if everyone present had been suddenly and simultaneously reminded of a pressing engagement elsewhere, and that his very life depended upon his immediately keeping it. I have a lively recollection of a crowd of otherwise well-conducted gentlemen making the most vigorous efforts to squeeze through that impracticable doorway. I am not quite certain, but I believe that the Lieutenant-Governor was not seriously incommoded in his efforts, but after his exit it was a case of "the devil seize the hindmost," the order of their coming was so different from the disorder of their going.

A CAUTION TO SNAKES.

Dr. P—, a well-known character in Bengal a few years ago, was in such a mortal state of terror of snakes that he spread a wide border of ashes all around his bungalow, and every day freely dusted a vile imitation of Calvert's carbolic powder all over the floors of his rooms, and sprinkled pine oil over his curtains. He flattered himself, as he expressed it, that his arrangements were a "caution to snakes." I was free to admit this, for none but an enthusiast could have tolerated such an atmosphere as he created for himself. But one evening, as he was proceeding up a passage leading from one building to another, he perceived a snake coiled up already for an attack upon an unsuspecting passer-by. P—— stole back cautiously and procured his gun, thinking, as he went, that it was very strange his arrangements for the exclusion of snakes from his abode had failed, and vowing vengeance against the brute which might have taken his life. Bang went one barrel; the creature was evidently hit, but still showed no movements; it must have been killed right off, or, perhaps, absurd idea, he had missed it. However, P—— determined to make sure this time, and creeping up a little nearer to the object fired again. Ah, dead as a door nail, P—— proceeded to investigate the damage. "By Jove," exclaimed he, "Why it's the khansamah's boots!" P—— often regretted having related this story, as it was a constant source of banter among his friends.

IGNORANCE IS BLISS.

I have had one or two narrow escapes during my career Here, for instance, is one, and I have no doubt there are those still in India who remember the incident. I possessed a very fine specimen of a single Ocillus Cobra. It was salmon-coloured, very lively, and peculiarly favourable in "behaviour" for manipulation. My snakeman was a drunken rascal, for whom, however, I had a liking, partly because, though he was a vagabond, he was at any rate a good-natured and courageous one, and partly for the reason that but for me he probably would have lost his life on one occasion; how I will relate hereafter. To return to my salmon-coloured cobra. As I was not at that time so expert in my manipulations as I subsequently became, I had caused the snake to be deprived of its fangs. It was the duty of the disreputable party to whom I have alluded above to examine the mouth of the brute from time to time. On one occasion I was showing some visitors how the snake would coil round my arm, then round my neck, and how, by my remaining perfectly still, the creature would not attempt to bite me. After the snake had accomplished its task I proceeded to explain that I had really undergone no risk, because the fangs had been removed, and on opening the mouth of the cobra to show this, I found the fang on the left side fully developed. I should not at that time have felt quite so confident and comfortable had I known that the snake round my neck was as deadly as any that ever came from the jungles. After my visitors had left that disreputable party experienced a mauvais quatre d'heure. He swore by all his gods that he would reform, begin at once; so he did, and by the evening he was in a more outrageous state of alcoholic imbecility than I had ever seen him before.

SAVING A MAN'S LIFE.

I have mentioned that I probably saved this man's life. It happened in this wise:—One afternoon he called me to see a cobra lying between the wall and eaves of a hut in my compound, and he began probing with a piece of wood a coil which could just be seen. The reptile began to glide round, and when the part near the tail came into view as the man supposed, he seized it, but to his astonishment and mine he had caught it near the head. It was gliding backwards, and it bit him. I instantly applied a ligature above the part which I exercised, and then cauterised the wound with nitric acid; although the pain was intense he never winced, nor did he exhibit the slightest signs of fear. The part of the treatment to which he had not the smallest objection was the "exhibition of a liberal allowance of brandy I never advise brandy in cases of snake poisoning. The fellow made a good recovery, but with a stiff inger which rendered him useless in future manipulations. Little did I think at the time that this stiffened index finger would serve several years afterwards to point a bit of good-natured sarcasm at my expense, in the consulting-room of our leading surgeon, when it came to be my turn to play even a more serious rôle than that played by my disreputable snakeman.

THE BAR IN BURMA. (Rangoon Times.)

With all professions and trades complaining of increasing numbers and reduced profits, it was hardly likely that the bar would remain long without new competitors for its emoluments. Barristers have been coming in by half dozens in the past few years, hoping, perhaps, that in a comparatively new field like Burma, they would have opportunities of making a livelihood, denied them in the presidency towns. With one single exception we believe none have found in Rangoon the "El Dorado" they expected, and this is hardly surprising, seeing that all legal business in courts here has decreased of late, and that for such small suits as there are there are about three times the number of advocates in the place, to what there were a few years ago; whilst in Rangoon the number of legal practitioners is thus said to be very much greater than are likely to find remunerative work. From various districts, both in Upper and Lower Burma, the complaint is pretty general, that there are not a sufficiency of advocates, and that people are put to considerable inconvenience by the absence of means for obtaining legal advice. Some years ago it was decided not to have examinations for advocates of the lowest grade, and hence the paucity of pleaders in many districts. This rule undoubtedly has worked a hardship on the people, and on a large class of fairly competent men who would have been able o pass an examination in the Civil and Criminal Codes in their own language, but who knew nothing of English, and were therefore unable to compete for such legal examinations as the Educational Syndicate has decided should in future only be conducted in the English language. There is at present actually a dearth of Burmese advocates in some Courts, presided over by Burmese Judges, whilst it is equally certain there is an excess of English-speaking advocates in Rangoon. Very few of the latter know Burmese, and without a thorough knowledge of the language they would be of no assistance to either clients or Judge in the Myooks' Courts. We think, in justice to the people, and to those who would be able to pass examinations in Burmese in the Civil and Criminal Codes, that some steps might be taken by the Syndicate to hold an examination for a limited number of third grade advocates in Burmese. We quite agree with the Syndicate's efforts to try and raise the standard of the higher grades of the bar. But these will not go to the districts, and in most Burma Courts they would be helpless if they did, for they seldom know Burmese, whilst the judges are often as ignorant of English. It is a trange that whilst two grades of advocates in Burma should be so numerous, the third, which is perhaps most required in the districts, should be so few in number as to amount to a hardship to the people resorting to the courts, and a class of men anxious to pass an examination if we would only hold it in a language they understand.

BENGAL.

It is said that Sir Steuart Bayley will leave Calcutta immediately for Silliguri, whence he will make his way up the Teesta valley to Kalimpong, and so on through Pedong to Colonel Graham's camp beyond Lingtu. From Gnatong he will return to Darjeeling. Captain Rawlinson, A.D.C., accompanies him on the tour.

IN Upper Assam the weather has been of late phenomenally cool. After a burst of sun and heat at the end of March there has been a succession of storms of wind and rain, and this has so thoroughly cooled the air that even sunny days have not been really hot. Even now, in the beginning of May, punkahs have only just come into use. This means, of course, a late season for tea, but many planters are not at all unwilling to let their bushes have a good rest before plucking is begun in earnest, and prefer a late commencing season to an early closing one.

The Marine Court, which has been inquiring into the loss of the American ship Continental, at Calcutta, has done its task. Captain Gilkey attributed the loss of the ship to a lee current. He was never more confident of the position of his ship, and the bearings he got were corroborated by his observations. He could not account for the disaster in any way. He went by the "Bay of Bengal Pilot," a book which directs that, failing to find the pilot brig, vessels should make for Balasore Boads, as the pilot brigs often put in there. Had he not been misled by this book, when he got ten fathoms soundings, his own instinct would have impelled him to put out to sea again; but he thought there was safe anchorage in the Roads. He had found his chief officer was ignorant of navigation, and would not trust him as far as he could see him. The Court took time to consider its decision.

A SEVERE hailstorm occurred at Jaipur in Assam on the afternoon of the 6th May. The hailstones were enormous, weighing in some instances about eight tolas. Considerable damage has been done to the green tea leaves, as well as to the mangoes and other summer fruits.

MADRAS.

DUFOUR, of "Dufour and Company," the Lottery Agents, against whom the Pondicherry Government warned the public, has been sentenced to three years' imprisonment and 500 francs fine for swindling. Dufour is a converted Native.

In modification of former orders, the Madras Government have issued instructions that all subordinate gazetted civil officers about to proceed on leave of any description exceeding one month, are, before they quit their stations, to furnish the heads of departments with their addresses while on leave. All heads of departments have also been warned that it will be their duty to see that this order is carried out, as much inconvenience will result from its non-observance. Heads of departments are required to leave their addresses either with the Chief Secretary or Revenue Secretary.

ENROLMENT OF NATIVES IN VOLUNTEER CORPS.—This question is beginning to assume a practical aspect, several influential and respectable Natives at Gooty, including a lawyer and a Vakil, having applied for enrolment in the Company of the Madras Railway Volunteers now at that Station. These men have expressed their willingness to wear the uniform, boots, and helmets of the regiment and to drill, side by side, with their European and Eurasian comrades.

At a meeting of the officers of the Madras Railway Volunteers called to consider this application, the order of Government sanctioning the enrolment of Natives was read, and in accordance with the ruling therein contained; that enrolments can only be made "if the corps is willing to receive them," it was resolved that the officers commanding companies be requested to forward the votes of their men for or against the admission of the present Native applicants.—Mail.

BOMBAY.

Mr. C. G. W. Macpherson, C.I.E., acting Judge and Sessions Judge of Ahmedabad, has been allowed furlough for six months.

It is now definitely settled that the Hon. Mr. Raymond West, C.S., goes home on six months' leave by the next mail steamer.

MR. E. A. BULKLEY, acting District Superintendent of Police, Upper Sind Frontier, has been allowed privilege leave for three months.

Mr. J. A. Coghlan, Executive Engineer, First Grade, has been allowed furlough for six months. Mr. R. R. Menneer acts for him as Executive Engineer, Eastern Nara.

THE following is a summary of the Bombay season report for the past week:—Condition of standing crops good. Cotton-picking progressing in parts of Kaira and Dharwar. Harvesting of late crops completed in Poona; continues in Shikarpur, Hyderabad, Upper Sind Frontier, Khandesh, Nasik, and Dharwar. Ploughing for next season's crops progressing in most districts. Scarcity of fodder in parts of Dharwar, Rutnagherry, Surat, and Kattywar.

The spring of Parsee charity seems to be of a perennial character. Mr. Manockjee Eduljee Albless, his brothers, and other members of the wealthy Albless family have subscribed Rs. 45,000 by way of perpetuating the name of Mr. Eduljee Furdoonjee Albless, a young member of that family, who died on May 16. The Albless family have given away larger sums than this for charitable purposes on former occasions. Out of the total amount subscribed by the family, Rs. 20,000 were distributed among the various Parsee charitable institutions, handsome donations being made from the sum to the Bai Sakerbai Hospital for Animals and the Leper Home called after the name of the family. The remaining sum, Rs. 25,000, has been set apart for some charitable purpose, which will be determined hereafter by the subscribers. Great sympathy is felt by the Parsees for the Albless family for the sad loss they have sustained by the death of a promising member of their family.

A BIG tiger made his appearance on the 10th of May on the verandah of Mr. Nanabhoy Byramjee Jeejeebhoy's bungalow, "Springwood," at Matheran. Mr. Nanabhoy and several of the members of his family returned to their bungalow after an evening ride, and when they were making preparations for dinner a large tiger was observed prowling on the verandah of the bungalow. An alarm was raised by the children, and such was the panic caused by the presence of the most unwelcome visitor that they all lost their presence of mind, and forgot to close the main door of the drawing-room. A number of servants armed with sticks then came out of their quarters and created a great noise, which frightened away the brute.

TIGERS AT MATHERAN.—A correspondent writes from Matheran:—With reference to the notification that appeared in the Times of India of the 15th instant a little more information may perhaps be interesting to the public. There cannot be one tiger but certainly two. One enormous brute has been seen at Porcupine Point, in broad daylight, his stripes standing out in the sunshine as clear as the telegraph wires at the office. Another much smaller, presumably a female, at Chowk Point (with spots in the place of stripes, but as they called him a tiger we will give the poor beggar his due), was seen by several ladies, who were startled and terrified by its sudden appearance and quick disappearance in the jungle. We have a trap here, set in the most frequented beat of these dreadful wild animals; it is baited with a live dog, and the kind ladies, every day in their morning walks, go down and feed the poor animal. There is evidently an opportunity for a shikar to get good sport here just now.

N.W. PROVINCES, AND PUNJAB.

In reply to the demand of E. J. Manasseh and others of the Jewish community of Lahore that an order might be passed for the enrolment of their children as Volunteers, the Local Government has stated that, as the matter of enrolment rests with Commandants of Volunteers, subject to the rules of the Corps, the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab is unable to pass such an order.

The Benares district has every reason to be grateful to its Magistrate and Collector, says the Civil and Military Gazette, for the efforts he is making to exterminate the system of dalali so prevalent in the courts. As a first step towards bringing about a reform, he has addressed a vernacular circular to all legal practitioners, inviting their co-operation, and asking them to form a committee to consider and draw up rules which will help to root out this great evil. Colonel R. Parry Nisbet, the Secretary to the Aitchison, Memorial Fund, has requested the Municipal Committee of Lahore to undertake the safe custody of the balance of the fund now in his hands. This balance will be utilised with other moneys in completing a series of pictures of the Lieutenant-Governors of the Punjab. The committee has undertaken the duty, and will shortly appeal to the public for further funds to enable them to obtain pictures of Sir Henry Davies and Sir Robert Egerton. Subscriptions have already been promised by several chiefs, which, with other sums expected from the public and the balance of Rs. 2,300, now in the hands of the Municipal Committee, will doubtless be sufficient to obtain two good pictures from England.

SIR LEPEL GRIFFIN AT MHOW.

SIR LEPEL GRIFFIN AT MHOW.

The Rast Goftar thus comments upon the speech of Sir Lepel Griffin at Mhow:—"Cruelty and brutality still triumph and women still weep," says Sir Lepel. This is fine poetry, but it is not quite an accurate description of the position of womankind in India. Indian husbands, taken altogether, are by no means so very cruel and brutal. They love their wives as one would love his horse or his dog, and the wives who are themselves the slaves of a belief in their natural inferiority, bear their bondage, if not willingly, at least with resignation as an ordination from Heaven. It is, however, none the less the duty of Hindoos and Mahomedans to devote but a portion of the energy, which they display in seeking their political advancement, for the purpose af raising their women from degradation. We are sorry that there are many, even among educated Natives, who shake their wise heads and portend dire results, if the shackles were broken and darkness were to give way to light. If Milton, to whom a passing reference dire results, if the shackles were broken and darkness were to give way to light. If Milton, to whom a passing reference has been made by Sir Lepel, was opposed to giving liberal education to women, it must be remembered that the great Puritan was also opposed to what he called "mixed dances," and his opinion about women must have been greatly coloured by his own bitter experiences of his wives, who have been supposed to be the inspiring cause of his pathetic outbursts in his great epic against "this fair defect of nature." So Milton cannot be cited by educated Natives as an authority against imparting instruction to females, while the experience of all civilised countries is decidedly in its favour. The enlightenment and emancipation of Indian women is a factor of the greatest importance in our civilisation; though we would say greatest importance in our civilisation; though we would say that their total emancipation ought not to precede by a long way their enlightenment.

The Kaisar-i-Hind says:—Sir Lepel Griffin has made a most eloquent speech at Mhow. He has shown more than once that he is as much a friend of the Parsis as a fee of the once that he is as much a friend of the Farsis as a foe of the Baboos. In extolling some characteristics of the Parsis, he refers to their commercial aptitude. We are sorry that the days of their commercial prosperity have gone. Although some of Sir Lepel Griffin's views on female education and social reform may not commend themselves to Hindoos, they are perfectly sound and just. The valedictory address of Sir Lepel stands in very pleasant contrast with some of his other procedure. speeches.

The Jame-Jamshed says:—Sir Lepel Griffin is mistaken in supposing that the Parsis are still largely engaged in commercial pursuits. Sir Lepel's experience of Parsis are confined to the merchants and shopkeepers belonging to that community the merchants and shopkeepers belonging to that community in the Punjab, in Central India, and on the North-West Frontier. Some of them are in very good circumstances, but if he were to examine the state of the Parsis of Bombay, he will find that they are retiring from the field of commerce, and the means of amassing wealth among them are getting scarce. The trade with China was at one time largely in the hands of Parsis, but they have been replaced by Memons, Bhattyas, and Bunyas, who have beaten their rivals from the fields, in spite of much inferior education and general culture. The Jame in another article says that while Sir Lepel is such an ardent advocate of the social freedom of Indian women, it is strange that he should come so often in the way of the political freedom of the male portion of this country.

THE POVERTY OF INDIA.

That the poverty of India is real there cannot be the least lestion. It seems, however, that this unpleasant disclosure question. It seems, however, that this unpleasant disclosure is vexing the souls of those stately authorities at Simla and Westminster who, while regularly drawing their magnificent salaries, are supremely indifferent to the means for mitigating that poverty. On the contrary, these authorities even now cherish the belief that India is growing richer and richer. At any rate, they fancy its annual income per head is certainly larger than Rs. 27, and that, too, in spite of the patent signs visible everywhere of further drain of our "tribute" to the West. Perhaps it may not be generally known that as far back as September last the various Provincial Governments were required to furnish full and sufficient information touching the required to furnish full and sufficient information touching the actual condition "of the lower classes of the population especially in agricultural tracts." It appears that the subordinate administrations have either been sleeping over the inquiry, or hatching materials for a rose-coloured account of the growing prosperity of the rural population. Whatever the reason of the delay the present head of the Indian Government seems to be anxious, before he finally leaves these shores, to learn the truth. It is to be devoutly hoped he may learn it though we are scentical on the point judging from our experito learn the truth. It is to be devoutly hoped its hisy learn the though we are sceptical on the point, judging from our experience of official manipulation of facts and figures. MATHERAN MARRIAGES

The Din Bandhu, in a note on "Courtship among the Simple Villagers near Matheran," says:—These poor and unsophisticated Thakurs teach their betters at least one lesson in the ways of wisdom, and that is in matters relating to marriage. They have, we are informed, no premature or infant marriages among them; and, contented as they are with their lot, and standing on a footing of equality with all the members of their community as far as their limited wealth and lowly dignity are concerned, they have no distinction as to rank and position to concerned, they have no distinction as to rank and position to observe in the disposal of their daughters. The simple maiden is free to make her own choice of partner, and, the selection once made, the girl is thenceforward known as "Potefadi," and the couple are formally wedded.

LIEUTENANT YOUNGHUSBAND'S JOURNEY.

A correspondent writes to The Times :- In the various references to Lieutenant Younghusband's brilliant journey across Central Asia from Lieutenant Younghusband's brilliant journey across Central Asia from China to India I have noticed no reference to its historical position in Asiatic exploration, save the brief remark of The Times correspondent in Calcutta, who, in telegraphing the traveller's arrival in Cashmere, said it was the first time any European had accomplished this journey since the days of Marco, the Venetian, 600 years ago. People are so occupied, perhaps, with the thrilling adventures of the traveller among the peaks and glaciers of the Mustagh that they forget Lieutenant Younghusband has performed a feat which has baffled the efforts of a score of Europeans in recent times—namely, to travel from China to Younghusband has performed a feat which has baffled the efforts of a score of Europeans in recent times—namely, to travel from China to India or India to China by land. In the early years of the century the eccentric Manning got from India as far *s Lhassa, being the only Englishman who has ever seen that city, but was not allowed to go further. Twenty years ago Abbé Huc got from Peking to Lhassa, but he got no further, and their successors have not had even their good fortune—none of them ever got far into Thibet in any direction. The following are the principal attempts made to get to India from China since the Treaty of Tientsin came into force, by which travelling in the interior of China was permitted to Europeans:—(1) In 1861 Captain Blakiston ascended the Yangtsze above Chungking in Szechuen, intending to strike away from the river where i turned south, and so through Thibet into Sikkim, Nepaul, or Cashmere. On account of the disturbed state of the country he was never able to leave the Yangtsze, through Thibet into Sikkim, Nepaul, or Cashmere. On account of the disturbed state of the country he was never able to leave the Yangtsze, although he ascended it far higher than any European had ever done before. (2) In 1868 Mr. T. T. Ctoper, the "pioneer of commerce in pigtails and petticoats," ascended the Yangtsze to Chungking, and thence struck out to the westward into Thibet through Cheng-tu, the capital of Szechuen, and across the borders at Tachienhoo into Eastern Thibet. A little beyond Batang he was made prisoner, and forced to come back In revenge he travelled south along the Thibetan border in a hitherto unexplored country to Atenze, Weisei, and thence turned inland to Tali-fu. Cooper's idea was to get into Assam, and soon after he attacked the difficulty from that side, and endeavoured to reach Batang through Thibet. Crossing was to get into Assam; and soon after he attacked the difficulty from that side, and endeavoured to reach Batang through Thibet. Crossing the Mishmee hills he reached a place a few days' journey from the spot at which he was turned back, but with the goal almost in sight he was stopped by the Thibetans. Scientific geographers say that Cooper was not one of them; possibly, but no man has done so much with his means. He was of the stuff of which heroes are made—dogged, wary, courageous, to be beaten only by the exercise of main force; he went farther into Thibet than any European since Abbé Huc (3) In 1877 Captain Gill reached Chungking, intending to go northward from Cheng-tu into Kansu, thence westward by Kokonor into Kashgaria, leaving Thibet out altogether. Circumstances at home prevented him from carrying out his plan, and after travelling through the Thibetan borderlands, between Batang and Tali-fu, he reached Bhamo. (4) In 1878 Count Bela Szechenyi, with a thoroughly equipped expedition, started to travel the route projected by Gill. They went from Hankow to Singan-fu in Shensi, thence into the extreme north-west corner of Kansu to the farthest Chinese station; here they were forced to turn back. Again at Lanchow-fu, on the Yellow River, in Kansu, they attempted to take the road to Lhassa through Sining, and got just to the banks of Kokonor; but here again they were turned back and told the proper road to Lhassa was through Szechuen, where every traveller had hitherto been turned back. The party went south and tried this road through Batang, but in vain; so, having tried three different ways of penetrating beyond China proper, they turned south to Bhamo. Lieutenant Younghusband, it will be noticed, took a circle far outside any of these. He never touched China proper once; he crossed the great wall beyond Pekin, and the task of travelling from China to India or India to China by the roads which baffled Blakiston, Cooper, Gill, and Count Szechenyi remains still to be accomplished. The Nepaulese Ambassador to Peking has just traversed it in complete safety, if not ease.

A BRITISH SOLDIER RUNNING AMUCK.

Cases of Native soldiers running amuck are of frequent occurrence, but it is not often that we hear of British soldiers breaking out. Such a case, however, has occurred at Delhi, where Private Venart, of the King's Own Scottish Borderers, ran amuck in the fort on the 13th inst. A correspondent gives the following particulars:—

It seems he had been drinking for some days, and was somewhat under the influence of liquor at noon when he was at the coffee house. He demanded a stick of tobacco on credit, and, the coffee-house keeper refusing, he seized a knife on the table and attacked the man, who, however, managed to effect his escape. The Provost Corporal, on duty then, hearing of the occurrence, came down with a guard of three men and endeavoured to arrest Venart, who struck at the Corporal with the knife, inflicting a slight flesh wound, and, breaking through the guard, rushed bareheaded out of the building. He next came across a party of native servants of the fort, who were under a tree close by, and attacked them. They all contrived to get away, however, except one unfortunate punkah coolie, who was lying on the broad of his back fast asleep. Venart threw himself on this man, planting his knees on his chest, and, thinking he had killed him—for the man showed no signs of life—he attempted no further violence.

he had killed him—for the man showed no signs of life—he attempted no further violence.

He then rushed away from the spot, observing he was being surrounded by the guard, and made for a baoli, or well, which is approached by means of stone steps leading to the surface of the water. He ran down the steps, and seeing there was no other way of getting at him except by the steps, he faced about and defied anyone to take him. The guard, finding Venart would not give himself up, then approached him with fixed bayonets. He made a determined fight for it, and received a bayonet wound in the right side before he could be

The Punkah coolie was immediately removed to hospital. He was in a dying condition at the time, but revived somewhat towards the afternoon. Little hope is enterts ined of his eventual recovery.

THE HYDERABAD MINING SCANDAL

The Nizam's Government have served notice on Sirdar Diler Jung of their repudiation of the purchase of shares in the Deccan Mining Company made by him last year. They demand of him repayment of £158,631, the price paid for 12,500 shares. This sum includes £18,750, the balance of the call due on 3,750 half-paid shares, which amount was drawn by Huq after his return to India. The repudiation is made on the ground that Abdul Huq concealed from the Nizam's Government the fact that he was interested in the company, and that the shares actually purchased were Abdul Huq's own property. The Sirdar is represented as being surrounded by astrologers and other professors of the occult.

The Statesman publishes a long article giving a history of the Hyderabad mining scandal, which represents an Englishman named Charles Hawes, in concert with Mr. Winter and a man named Barnet, negotiating with Abdul Huq to obtain a concession for a railway which he undertook to do in consideration of a commission paid to himself of 1½ per cent. on a capital of four millions, subsequently raised to 2½ per cent. or £120,000, Mr. Hawes stipulating in return that Abdul Huq should also secure a concession of the mining rights of the State for them for thirty years, at a nominal annual royalty of £1,000. The value of this concession was estimated a£1,500,000. Finally, it was arranged amongst them that Mr. Hawes should have a three-anna share, Mr. Barnet three-annas, Mr. Winter two annas, Mr. Forbes, of Bombay, two annas, and Abdul Huq six annas. Huq obtained £100,000 out of the £120,000 paid for the railway concession, but what became of the remaining £20,000 the Statesman does not know. Mr. Hawes, who is now living at Rajkote, and who was the originator of the idea of a mining concession, seems to have been dropped out of the confederacy when he could not get English financiers to take it up, and Mr. Winter got Mr. Waton to work it, assuring him it was worth £400,000 to him. The Stat sman says it was to no purpose that it exposed the true character of the railway scheme again and again. Mr. Cordery was all-powerful as Resident and Abdul Huq had secured such support in London that it seemed hopeless to contend against the influence leagued against the young Nizam. The retirement of Mr. Cordery and the advent of Mr. Howell changed matters. The Viceroy, it is said, was incensed at being deceived about the offer of sixty lakhs and the successful prosecution of the Rumbold claims when he had absolutely prohibited assistance being given from the Residency.

House Accommodation.—The vexed question of house accommodation for Military officers has shifted its base from Secunderabad to Bolarum. It is rumoured that the Military authorities there have applied to the Resident for permission to dispossess certain civil residents in favour of the officers of the Hyderabad contingent. Such a request, which is as unjust as would be the demand on a civilian to surrender to a military officer a particular coat to which he had taken a violent fancy, would never have been made, but that the practice existed in times past when law was little known and lsss cared for and when it had the support of the fiction that the house erected within the cantonment limits were only allowed to be erected on the understanding that Military officers should have a prior right to occupy them. It is obvious that the number of houses in the cantonments of Secunderabad and Bolarum are vastly in excess of Military requirements, and therefore at least one half-the number of them, it is reasonable to suppose, could not have been erected on the understanding above indicated. Even if the printed cantonment regulations lent any colour to such a practice, it must be remembered, they are not law, and no magistrate would or ought to recognise them as such. In the best interests of the community the rights of property are carefully guarded by the laws of the land, and we cannot therefore for a moment suppose that the Resident will endorse the proposal of the military authorities of Bolarum. Capital is proverbially sensitive, and this would be a very unpolitic violation of its rights. Several Civil residents at Secunderabad have from time to time received notice from the [Quartermaster-General to vacate their houses "within a month," "a week"; or "twenty-four hours," but the notices are still unregarded, and possession is retained with the consent of the landlords. Bolarum folk might make a note of this.—Deccan Times.

AN UNFORTUNATE ELEPHANT.—The Commissariat Transport Department of the Indian Government is ever in trouble about the care of its clephants. There is no department or special official who understands the constitution of this animal. No one seemingly knows how to keep him well and sound; nor when the necessity arises for it, does anyone understand how to destroy the brute in a humane, yet officially orthodox, fashion. Recently, were recounted how one of these animals, who had come to be regarded as a veritable white elephant, could not be cured of his moral turpitude, was, by order of Government, sentenced to death; and the execution was carried out at Mhow, when the animal was riddled with bullets before he succumbed to a final shot. We have had a similiar elephant murder in our midst. The victim was a female of good character, whose physical condition was a source of concern and worry to its department. She had been suffering for a long time from an, officially termed, incurable ulcer in the foot. There was a prescribed Code of Regulation course to be adopted, and the full length of red tape was run out in the correspondence and references about the sick elephant; but no relief could be provided, and the officials dare not go out of the beaten tracks and send for a Native expert,—and there are Natives in the various Native States who thoroughly understand the management and diseases of elephants,—or send the animal to the Lahore Veterinary College. Orders were asked for, and these were duly received directing the animal to be destroyed. The Regulations are silent as to the means for destroying elephants, so the department took it upon itself to try poison. Large doses of poison were administered into the animal's food by means of needle syringes, but all to no purpose. Poisoning an elephant is evidently a laborious task. The poor brute was sick unto death; but would not die. At length, when the animal was half crazed with having her intestines turned into a laboratory, and her veins charged with opiates, &c., i

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

THE DIVINE PROGRAMME OF THE WORLD'S HISTORY.*

"It is an unquestionable fact, and one which has hardly received the consideration it deserves, that the volume which claims to be a supernatural revelation—the inspired word of claims to be a supernatural revelation—the inspired word of God—clearly and boldly commits itself, even from its opening pages, to a prophetic programme of the World's History." In these circumstances Mr. and Mrs. Grattan Guinness, from whose work, entitled "The Divine Programme of the World's History," the quotation is borrowed, have endeavoured to analyse the "Story of the World," with the view of comparing what has happened with what has been foretold. To say that the results are proported in the court of the truth. the results are remarkable is but an outline of the truth. To and re-results are remarkable is but an outline of the truth. To appreciate the wonderful power of this volume it must be read and re-read; but to understand it aright its object must be grasped with clearness. It is not dogmatic; it lays down no dicta; but merely arranges evidence explanatory of the fulfilment of the prophecies which fill so large and important a space in Holy Writ.

It is manifest that before all things it is necessary to gain an insight into the pretensions of the Bible, otherwise omissions seem endless and insertions quite out of place. The introduction, therefore, puts before the reader in clear and concise language the purport of the sacred volume, pointing out what it is and what it is not. This chapter in itself will amply repay perusal. This point made plain, the writers proceed to examine the seven principal sections of the prophetic utterances, viz., the Adamic programme, the Noahic programme, the Mosaic programme, the Davidic programme, the Daniel programme, and the Christian programme. And what a marvellous picture is drawn! Events foretold hundreds, aye, thousands, of years beforehand, events as improbable of fulfilment as could possibly be desired, events not linked with occurrences in course of progress, but in antipathy to every sentiment and feeling of the nations round whom they centred—events which no one would have dared to hazard. Yet not sentiment and feeling of the nations round whom they centred—events which no one would have dared to hazard. Yet not one jot or tittle thereof has failed. This is absolutely crushing to scepticism. Who amongst mankind can read the future even of four-and-twenty hours? Who, indeed, can scan the face of unknown time even a few minutes in advance? Yet here is a book which courts criticism, and is prepared to stand or fall by the test of actual experience. "If," it seems to say, "I do not accurately guage and predict what is about to occur through the long and distant ages of time to comerif my prognostications turn out false—reject me, spurn me, treat me with contempt and scorn." Then comes, in all fairness, the other side of the picture. "If I have hitherto told aright what the world's history would be, if I have never failed aright what the world's history would be, if I have never failed in my predictions, then accept me, trust me, believe me, and, albeit the remainder of the prophecies are in some respects improbable and hard to understand, let the past stand sponsor for the future, and confidence drive away and dispel doubt and suspicion and disbelief."

It were much to be wished the volume under review were read by everyone and anyone. Infidelity is the besetting sin of the present day; people seem to forget that it is an essentiality inherent in the circumstances of the case that a Deity must always be removed above the capacity of his creatures, because so soon as the intellects of the dwellers on earth are on a par with the spirit of the Ruler of Heaven it is obvious that man and the Almighty are separated by a thread so slender that respect merges into contempt for a being but little removed from ourselves, and as such not entitled to receive the homage of worship and adoration. No, a thousand times no; the Lord of the Universe must be incomprehensible to the understandings of poor, fallen humanity. And what greater token of stupendous majesty than the power to predict long centuries beforehand the events of this uncertain and changeable world; hence the sim and of this uncertain and changeable world; hence the aim and object of the author's analysis is to show the Creator as a God of all Power and Might. This is a noble effort, and its accomplishment reflects the highest credit upon the talents, capacity, and pious fervour of the accomplished and painstaking writers. We warmly congratulate them upon the production of a work which may, without fear of exaggeration, be termed remarkable and full of interest.

THE STATESMAN SERIES—"PALMERSTON."*

Few statesmen have ever attained a greater hold upon the affections of the country than Viscount Palmerston. Why was this? A perusal of Mr. Lloyd Saunders' brief epitome of the Premier's career will serve to solve the problem. Expressed in a few words, the answer is contained in the nick-name under the cartoons which appeared in Punch, "Plucky Pam." Palmerston was certainly a man of action, having the courage of his convictions. Amidst a shower of abuse, amidst torrents of invective, he pursued the even tenor of his ways; nothing daunted him, nothing dismayed him. These traits were just what Englishmen love; they worshipped him as a bold fighter and pugnacious champion of the nation. To the vast majority it mattered nought that he was often in the wrong, that he never made allowances for honest difference of opinion, that he never displayed much—if any—consideration for the fancies and fads of opponents whom he scorned or friends whom he took no pains to conciliate, that he had a reputation for untrustworthings that he ignored the instance. reputation for untrustworthiness, that he ignored the instruction of his superiors, and laughed to scorn any pedantic adherence to the red tape rules of routine and formality; it was enough for the hydra-headed public that "Plucky Pam" held his own, that he had the honour of old England at heart, that patriotism was the mainspring of his actions. So they adored and respected the statesman who honoured his country and added renown to the land of his hirth added renown to the land of his birth.

added renown to the land of his birth.

It would not, however, be altogether fair to omit reference to the aid and assistance which Palmerston received at the hands of his wife. The salon of society lent no small degree of help to the closet of diplomacy. Her reunions were a power in the political world—created by her they died with her. None before or since ever "coerced" the fickle whims and caprices of every day high life into the service of the national counsels in a way which Viscountess Palmerston succeeded in doing. Facile princeps she never had but one solitary rival—the gatherings at Holland House; each powerful in a way, they differed materially, in so far that the Lord of the House was the moving spirit in the one case, while in the other the wife was the life and soul of all that happened.

Mr. Saunders has been painstaking and careful in his labours; but to our judgment he dwells rather more upon "Pam's" faults than his merits. He does not paint his hero in colours for the sufficiently glowing to meet the merits of the case; for the national instinct was right when it placed the remains of that departed statesman by the side of England's heroes in Westminster Abbey, and erected a statue to his memory on the spot overlooking the scene where he was wont to gain the victory of courage, loyalty, and patriotism.

Colburn's United Service Magazine (W. H. Allen and Co.) Colburn's United Service Magazine (W. H. Allen and Co.) is rich for the present month of June in several excellent articles, amongst which "Russia in the Caucasus and Armenia," by Colonel Paske, and "Glimpses of German Military Life," by Colonel Lonsdale Hale, call for special commendation. The very instructive and interesting series of papers on the origin and progress of the Indian armies, by the late Colonel Rivett Carnac, is continued, but with an editorial note attached to the contribution saying that it was penned during the colonel's last and fatal illness. He died really in literary harness. "On Furlough" is as usual light and bright.

The Illustrated Naval and Military Magazine (W. H. Allen and Co.) continues to keep the high position it has attained under its present editor. Lieut.-Colonel Spalding's "Life of Suvoroff," "The Wanderings of a War Artist," and "Out of the Beaten Track," will all well repay perusal, and all are profusely illustrated. There are, besides, several papers of special interest to the services—naval and military.

THE project of an Indo-European canal by way of the Euphrates Valley and the Persian Gulf will, it is claimed, realise two important results, namely, those of irrigation and navigation, and thus restore fertility to those vast waters. Such a canal would shorten the present route of going and coming to Bombay some six days.

The proceeds from two sales of Bengal opium and one month's pass duty on opium exported from Bombay amount to Rs. 1,17,84,225, being Rs. 4,85,225 better than the estimate. The whole gain has been made on Bombay opium, Bengal showing a deficiency of Rs. 73,550.

THE following items regarding the consumption of liquor in the Mysore State for the year 1886-87, the latest available at present. The Cantonment consumed 82,362 gallons of arrack at a cost of Rs. 2,73,001; the Petta 39,339 gallons, valued at Rs. 1,30,227. The people at the capital city were satisfied with but 14,256 gallons at Rs. 47,230. The Bengalore, Chittuldroog, Hassan and Mysore Districts consumed a total of 130,180 gallons at Rs. 2,92,933, making a grand total of 266,139 gallons, which gave a revenue of Rs. 7,43,492.

INDIAN MUNICIPALITIES.

WHEN the late Prince Consort hazarded the remark that Constitutional Government in England was on its trial, it may be remembered that he was met with a howl of indignation from several quarters, and was accused of showing disloyalty to the country of his adoption, and to the Sovereign he was wedded to. It was not until after his death that these accusations were acknowledged to be as false as they were ungenerous, and that the truth was also recognised that the words which Prince Albert had spoken were words of sense and truth. stitutional Government in England is still on its trial, and we are experiencing the good and evil results of it. The good, no doubt, predominates over the evil in every direction, and we have excellent reasons to be proud of our "British Constitution" and of the free institutions which flourish under it. But we, unfortunately, make the mistake of trying to force these institutions upon other soils for which they are not suited, and where positive evil is the result of the forcing process. We have been experimenting in this manner in India, and are now reaping the harvest of our folly. We have sown the wind, and are now gathering in the whirlwind. We are not of those who rigidly keep to the opinion that India was gained by the sword, and must, therefore, be held by that weapon only; but we are of opinion that the day has not arrived for carrying in that country our English ideas of local self-government. Babies are supposed to be taught to walk before they are allowed to run, and India is still in her babyhood regarding any comprehension of our "free institutions." She understands despotic rule, likes it, and has accepted it as her Kismet or fate. The grafting of modern English theories of government upon a conservatism of centuries is what she does not understand, and which she is not fitted for. Yet this is what we are attempting to do. We are handing over the principal cities of India to the rule of municipalities according to an elective system which throws all power into the hands of Natives who are utterly unfitted to exercise the rights, or understand the responsibilities, which they have been entrusted with by the Paramount Power. The consequence of this is, that the sanitary condition of the cities in question is being neglected, and cholera and fever are again rampant, and claiming their victims by thousands. Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay are all suffering from the apathy and ignorance of their municipal governors. So far as Calcutta is concerned, it is reported that it is in a worse state as to sanitation than it was thirty years ago; the Bombay Municipality fight, argue, and impede progress; and as for Madras, the latest local paper to hand states that the Municipality "appear anxious to show the world generally how filthy they can make the city, and to what lengths they can go in neglecting their duties." But the complaints against municipalities where the Natives are in a majority are general throughout India, and municipal self-government is being condemned on its own practical results. Thingshave got so bad in Madras that a "Citizen" of that community writes to the Madras Times suggesting that a public meeting be held to protest against the way that the Municipality have been behaving. "Madras," he says, "has the appearance of being totally neglected. The People's Park is a howling wilderness, the roads are not fit to ride or drive upon, and the insanitary condition of the city is: dangerous to the lives of all the inhabitants." Madrasunder these circumstances may well, indeed, be called the "benighted;" but it is not in a worse condition, if reports are to be credited, than Calcutta and Bombay. There is but one remedy for the evil wrought by what, no doubt, were good intentions, and that remedy is to let the Paramount Power in India reassume its paternal sway, and be deaf to all suggestions regarding "self-government" institutions until it has been made certain that those whoclamour for the privilege are fit to be entrusted with its exercise. At present we are doing wrong under the idea that we are doing good, and the sooner that the wrong is: rectified the better will it be for India and for the Englishmen who have to sojourn therein.

A PLAINTIFF, who came from the Deccan, lately electrified a Punjab court, for he gave his depositions in a theft case in pure Sanskrit. The judge, including the members of the bar, were in a fix, and had to seek the assistance of a pundit before they could follow him. This almost proves that Sanskrit is not quite a dead language yet.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

COLONEL J. JOPP, Commandant 12th Bombay Infantry, has been appointed to be Deputy Quartermaster-General in succession to Lieutenant-Colonel Watling, whose tenure of service on the Staff expired on the 30th April.

Colonel G. De C. Morton officiates as 1st Assistant Adjutant-General for Colonel Bushman, who has gone on leave; Colonel Cooke from the Sirhind Division taking Colonel Morton's place on the Head-Quarters Staff.

THE Government of India have sanctioned the appointment of Lieutenant-Colonel L. F. Jamieson, on special duty in connection with grass preserves, and Captain G. Wingate, Assistant Commissary-General, 3rd class, to control grass operation in the Eastern and Western Circle, respectively, under the orders of the Commissaries-General of Circles. Captain Wingate will not be seconded while on this duty, but will remain on the effective list of the Commissariat Department.

THE issue of fixed rates of compensation, in lieu of ration, to native troops and followers in the Quetta District have had the effect of reducing local bazaar prices. These, it is expected, will be still further reduced when the North-Western Railway is opened and in full working order. The rates have been fixed up to the 30th June.

THE Government of India have entered into arrangements to enable the War Office to make payments of Savings Bank balances, in anticipation of the receipt of such remittances from India, to time expired soldiers and invalids.

THE War Office do not scruple to follow Indian procedure in the keeping and rendering of army accounts. It has been the practice in England for regiments to render half yearly This has been abolished from the 1st April, and all accounts. paymasters of regiments of cavalry, battalions of infantry, colonial corps, regimental royal artillery districts and divisions. of royal engineers, have been ordered to render monthly accounts to the War Office, supported by the monthly pay lists rendered to them by officers commanding troops, batteries, or companies.

A SAD accident, ending fatally, occurred at Lucknow on the evening of the 8th May. Private Newnham, Royal Welsh Fusiliers, whilst stooping down was accidentally shot by a comrade. A party having fallen in for a match shooting on the range, one man had loaded his rifle and was practising aiming; but unfortunately he pulled the trigger and the charge passed through Newnham's side to the heart. Death was instantaneous. The Cantonment Magistrate held the usual inquest. The verdict was accidental death, both men was instantaneous. The Cantonment Magistrate usual inquest. THE 32nd Pioneers have been ordered to hut themselves for the rains. Colonel Graham has selected sites for the huts, and the 32nd Pioneers will provide the necessary shelter for the Transport establishments. Colonel Graham will retain 250 mules at his disposal.

The grant of free passages to lady nurses to and from hill stations, when proceeding on medical certificate, and on all occasions when they travel on duty, has been sanctioned by the Government of India.

THE Government of India have sanctioned the permanent withdrawal of the Native Infantry detachment from Lalitpore, and to its rejoining regimental headquarters at Jhansi.

THE Government of India have decided that pending the whole settlement of Royal Artillery commands in India, or until May 6th, 1889, when all the Rs. 400 commands will have lapsed, the Commander-in-Chief will notify in Royal Artillery Indian Regimental Orders the names of those lieutenantcolonels who will successively draw Rs.300 command pay; and that when more than the fixed establishment of lieutenant-colonels are serving in India the names of the juniors drawing no command pay should also be so notified to prevent mistakes and erroneous claims being preferred.

A new and revised edition of the Vernacular translation of "Field Exercises and Evolutions of Infantry" has just been issued under the orders of the Government of India. Colonel Toker, Deputy Secretary in the Military Department, is the translátor.

Bombay means to have a new newspaper of a highly advanced, not to say Radical, type. The Hon. Mr. Budroodin Tyabjee, late President of the National Congress, and a Mussulman, the Hon. Kasinath Trimbak Telang, an accomplished Hindu barrister, and Mr. Pherozesha Mehta, a distinguished Parsi, are the leading members of a syndicate, which with Mr. Murzban, late of the Bombay Gazette, as where we have a leavned Professor of Sangkrit as editor, we manager, and a learned Professor of Sanskrit as editor, proposes to bring out the new venture as an evening paper.

THE P. AND O. COMPANY.

The report for presentation on the 5th inst. states: Since the date The report for presentation on the 5th inst. states:—Since the date of the last report three of the company's older vessels have been sold on satisfactory terms, viz., the Zambesi, Mongolia, and Tanjore. The two large steamers, the Victoria and Britannia, built for the company by Messrs. Caird and Co., were announced in the last report as being actually at work. The sister vessels to these, the Oceana and Arcadia, contracted for by Messrs. Harland and Wolff, have since been delivered. The Oceana is now on her return voyage from Australia, and the Arcadia leaves London for Sydney on June 1. The performance of the Oceana, like those of the Victoria and Britannia, has afforded great satisfaction. At the moment of issuing this report tenders have been invited by the directors for the construction of four large cargo-carrying vessels of a special class, to be employed chiefly on the company's lines between India and China.

The New Australian mail contract is to be as hitherto, a fortnightly one, and the period of transit between Brindisi and Adelaide, the port in Australia at which the mails are to be embarked and disembarked, m Australia at which the mails are to be embarked and disembarked, is thirty-two days twelve hours, the subsidy being at the rate of £85,000 per annum—the same amount as paid under the late contract, which was, however, only for a service between Ceylon and Australia. This contract is made subject to confirmation by the Parliament of the several colonies interested, as well as by the Imperial Parliament. The India, China, and Australia new mail services were duly commenced. on Feb. 1, and all these mails are now carried via the Suez Canal. is gratifying to the directors to report that since the inauguration of the new service the work has proceeded with great smoothness, and, although an important acceleration of the mails took place under these contracts, such acceleration has not only been fulfilled but, as a general rule, increased.

The result of the last six months' working of the Eastern trade has almost literally fulfilled the anticipations contained in the last report. The net result, so far as the company is concerned, is that a fair increase in outward receipts has been counterbalanced to a large fair increase in outward receipts has been counterbalanced to a large extent by a diminution in homeward earnings, owing to the general dulness and low rates prevailing on nearly all the lines occupied by the company. The balance of receipts would, however, be still somewhat in the company's favour were it not for the fact that the reduction in the India and China Mail Subsidy, to the extent of nearly £100,000 per annum, takes effect in the present year. This will certainly, as far as can be foreseen at present, prevent an increase in the revenue for the year. An interim dividend of 5 per cent. per annum is now recommended revenue for the year. is now recommended

THE FALL IN EXCHANGE AND SILVER.

Though some portion of the fall that has just taken place in Eastern exchanges and silver has been recovered, it has in Eastern exchanges and silver has been recovered, it has again called the attention of the very large number of people who are immediately affected thereby. This is periodically what has been happening for some years, but a solution appears to be as remote now as when the question first forced itself before public notice. Meanwhile, bankers and merchants say truly, "Exchange has got the bottom knocked out of it." Each hopes for some recovery which appears, however, more and more problematical with each successive decline. On the subject the Standard in a leading article remarks:—

For the whole question, both with India and Russia, is one of debt, not, as so many people suppose, of silver or gold mining. Russia has contracted such an enormous debt at home and abroad, that she has lost her metallic currency almost completely, and is, month by month, in greater straits to find the gold wherewith to meet her obligations in greater straits to find the gold wherewith to meet her obligations abroad. For a time, the great spurt which a low exchange has given her exports may ease this strain, but the process is, after all, one of exhaustion. A low exchange is a sluice more widely opened, through which the sap and substance of a country drains off and disappears. It is so in India. We may disguise it by incessant loans, by creating new "outlets for capital" in the shape of railway companies, but it goes on, and the slow, sure fall of the Indian Exchange marks the gradual decrease in the staying powers of the country. The foreign trade of India is over-weighted by the home demands of the Government, and until these demands are reduced—a thing much more easy to suggest than to put into practical shape—there seems really no hope of checking the fall in the value of the rupee. It may be hastened a little by such an event as the Russian competition, but it would go down, surely, steadily, whether or not. The rupee was worth one shilling and tenpence in 1876, but the weight of the Council drafts—which since that date have never run under ten million pounds per annum, and have usually been from fourteen to seventeen and per annum, and have usually been from fourteen to seventeen and even eighteen million pounds—has pressed it down without a chance of recovery. A loan now and then checks the fall for a month or two, of recovery. A loan now and then checks the fall for a month or two, enabling the Government of India to set a new debt off against the obligations of old debts; but that does not last long, and the drain is constant. For this reason it is always impossible to conceive where the depreciation of the rupee will stop; equally impossible to imagine any other means of turning it the other way, except the reduction of the Government drawings from England. The movements of silver, its abundance or scarcity, cheapness or dearness, are trivial and quite secondary matters beside this important subject. It involves the secondary matters beside this important subject. It involves the future stability and prosperity of the Indian Empire, as well as of Indian trade; and if the attention which Russian competition has drawn to it once more leads to action in the only way that action can do good, some benefit will have been reaped from what looks un unmixed evil. It may take a long time to empty such a cistern as India, but it is being emptied. India is growing poorer in the capacity to sustain her foreign charges, just as Russia is; and now the one is promising to hasten the day of trouble for the other. We comes nearly half the world will be affected by the shock When the crash comes nearly half the world will be affected by the shook.

J. C. R. writes to the same journal that we should profit by past experiences. During several years previous to 1696, he says, the silver coinage (in England) had been greatly deteriorated by being clipped and otherwise debased to such an extent that guineas (originally coined to represent twenty shillings) progressively rose, as the silver coin became worse, to be of the value of thirty shillings in the vitiated silver currency, just as the sovereign has now done in relation to the rupee. The foreign exchanges at the above period had become highly adverse to England but so soon has now done in relation to the rupee. The foreign exchanges at the above period had become highly adverse to England, but so soon as Parliament, by an Act passed in 1695, succeeded in restoring the silver coin to its intrinsic value, guineas fell to twenty-one shillings, and the exchanges rose to par. At that period silver was the standard currency in England, all debts being contracted and payable in it; just as it is now in India. The two cases are parallel, although in the one the depreciation was caused by the reduced quantity of silver in the coins, and in the other by the reduced value of the silver contained in them. During the period from 1802 to 1817 the practice of hoarding guineas, as sovereigns are now hoarded in India, was carried to such an extent that they were hardly to be obtained for any purpose. The cause of this was the depreciated currency of that period, which consisted chiefly of inconvertible one-pound notes and county-bank issues, and was appropriately compared by Mr. Fox to the bad-silver currency of 1696. When the depreciated country issues were swept away by the panie of 1815 to 1817, the paper price of gold fell from five pounds six shillings to three pounds eighteen shillings and sixpence per ounce, and the foreign exchanges again rose in proportion. The only conclusion that can be drawn from the above instances is that the reduced intrinsic value of the rupee as the circulating medium in India duced intrinsic value of the rupee as the circulating medium in India places it on a footing precisely similar to that of the debased silver coinage of 1696 and the depreciated paper currency of 1802-17, and, consequently, that measures corresponding to those which at the above periods rectified the foreign exchanges in our case will now restore the Indian exchange to par.

OPENING OF THE CENTRAL ASIAN RAILWAY.

The Trans-Caspian Railway, from Mikhailovsk, on the Caspian Sea to Samarcand, a distance of about 900 miles, was formally opened on the 27th ult., the anniversary of the coronation of the Emperor Alexander III. The first train which has passed over the whole line, and which brought General Annenkoff and his colleagues, deputations of learned societies, representatives of the Press, and a number of foreigners of distinction, invited especially to share in the inauguration of the new railway, arrived here at the appointed time not withstanding the floods between Kizil Arvat and Askabad, and a considerable rising of the waters of the Amu Daria, which threatened at one time to cause some delay. Here the arrival of the train was awaited by rising of the waters of the Amu Daria, which threatened at one time to cause some delay. Here the arrival of the train was awaited by General Rosenbach, Governor of the Turkestan territory, the Emlassy from the Ameer of Bokhara, the local authorities, and a mass of people, Russians and natives. Amid the thunder of cannon the train stopped close to the famous tomb of Tamerlane, where the company alighted. Luncheon was served at the official residence of General Rosenbach, who proposed "The health of the Czar," the toast evoking most enthusiastic cheers. Senator Semenoff, President of the Imperial Geographical Society, delivered an address, in which he dwelt upon the eminent services of General Annenkoff, who had so indefatigably laboured for the completion of the great railway which he that day been completed. During the day a solemn Te Deum was sung, and General Rosenbach held a review of the troops in garrison at Sanarcand. The laying of the rails of the new line was only completed yesterday evening. The town is decorated with flags, and this evening there are to be great illuminations. Telegraphic communication with Europe is now open, and according to a special commissioner tion with Europe is now open, and according to a special commissioner of the Pall Mall Gazette at present in Russia, it is possible to reach Samarcand from London, via Russia, in twelve days—that is, provid-

Samarcand from London, via Russia, in twelve days—that is, providing there are no accidents and the trains are punctual.

The journal Grashdanin, in an apparently mixed article, regards the late reports published by the foreign Press, to the effect that Russia contemplated annexing Herat, as invented merely with the object of embroiling her with England, and, above all, in order to get Russia's forces sent into the heart of Asia. The journal adds that there is no question of such a project so long as the Afghaus, avoiding a renewal of the recent incident, shall respect the inviolability of the Russian frontier.

COMMERCIAL.

Messrs. Hawes and Co., after mentioning that the first New Season's Darjeeling Tea from the Land Mortgage Banks Moondakotee Estate were sold at fair prices on the 28th ult., proceed to report as follows on Ceylon and Java Tea, from the 4th to the 31st ult.:—Ceylon Tea: With the large supplies offering during the last three weeks, viz., 21,856 packages, consisting mostly of poor and inferior qualities, and the reluctance of country dealers to purchase to any appreciable extent, values for all grades show a decided decline, the few parcels with special point or quality making the exception. It will be a terrible mistake for the future interests of Ceylon Tea planters if, in the rush for present profits, they force their plants unduly, producing quantity rather than quality. It was the superior flavour and pungent liquors, without the bitterness of many Indian growths, which brought Ceylon Teas to the front, but this good reputation will soon be lost if the present falling off in quality is allowed to continue. Broken Pekoes: The grades now selling at 1s. to 1s. 2d. per lb. show a fall of about 2d. to 3d. per lb. for the month, and appear to give excellent value at present prices; good, medium, and fine have been in very limited supply, and realise full rates. Pekoes of fair quality, which were selling at 1s. to Messrs. Hawes and Co., after mentioning that the first New Season's

1s. 1½d. per lb. a few weeks since, are at the moment worth only 10½d. to 1s. per lb.; good medium and fine are scarce, and well competed for. Souchongs and Pekoe Souchongs under 10d. per lb. are in good demand, at the present reduction of fully 1d. per lb.; medium and fine are scarce and dear. The lowest quotation for Leaf Tea is now .8½d. per lb. Java Teas have been in small supply, viz., 1,850 packages, of which only 945 were of direct import, the remainder being mostly ex recent Amsterdam sales; these latter representing very poor quality, weak prices resulted. Pekoes: The export demand still continues slack, and prices show no recovery. Souchongs and Pekoe Souchongs, when of good quality, are freely taken by the home trade. Broken Pekoes are scarce, and in good inquiry. Broken Teas with good black leaf draw active competition, at rather dearer rates. With regard to China Tea the same firm reports for the month as follows:

—The general decline in the value of common and good common. Congou, and the arrival of the first Canton Teas, have been the principal features of the past month. Common, good common, and medium Red Leafs, when pressed for sale, have marked decidedly lower rates. Red Leafs show such exceptional value now, especially the grades from 5d. to 9d. per lb., that they will probably compete seriously with the lower grades of Ceylon and Indian Teas, which at corresponding prices appear very dear. Black Leafs, though weaker for the month, do not show any important decline. The new Canton Congous, so far represented, are mostly of indifferent quality, and many tarry in character. Privately, the trade did not bid freely for them, but auction being resorted to, sufficiently low standards were soon established to attract ready buyers. Fine medium and fine Black and Red Leafs, though abnormally scarce, seem little wanted. The few remaining parcels, when offered for sale, meet considerably lower bids than were obtainable a few weeks since. The auctions have not been heavy, viz., 74,223 packages, represe 1s. 1id. per lb. a few weeks since, are at the moment worth only 10id. to bids than were obtainable a few weeks since. The auctions have not been heavy, viz., 74,223 packages, representing 50,549 packages Congous, 9,186 Green, and 14,488 packages Scented Teas. Of the 50,549 packages Congous, 30,696 packages were sold at 5d. per lb. or under. Lowest quotation for New Season's Black Leaf during the month were 33d. per lb., ditto Red Leaf 3 5-16d.

Messrs. Layton and Co. write with regard to Indian and Ceylon

Messrs. Layton and Co. write with regard to Indian and Ceylon Tea:—This week being a partial holiday the public sales were few and small, the total amounting only to 11,355 packages, of which 7,600 were from Ceylon. The prices obtained for Indian were not in all cases so good as last week, even the common grades "for price" showing a slight tendency to ease. Ceylon growths also went slowly, the assortment from some estates being inferior in quality, and not

Messrs. H. A. Hertz and Co. in an analysis of 854,270 packages of Indian Tea sold at auction from May 17, 1887, to May 16, 1888, show that the quantity brought to auction has increased by about 55,000 packages; Leaf Tea has increased by about 70,000 packages, whilst Broken Tea has decreased by 15,000 packages. A considerable increase has taken place for Pekoes in the range under 8d., and at from 1s. 04d. to 1s. 4d. for Pekoe Souchongs under 10d., for Souchongs under 8d., and for Broken Tea and Fannings under 6d. There has been a less increase for Broken Pekoes in the range at from 1s. 24d. to 1s. 6d., and for Dust Siftings under 6d.; a considerable decrease for Broken Pekoes at from 84d. to 1s., and for Pekoe Fannings at from 84d. to 10d.; and a less considerable decrease for Broken Tea and Fannings at from 64d. to 10d. With regard to 185,450 packages of Ceylon Teas sold during the same period the quantity brought to auction has increased by about 76,000 packages.—Leaf Tea 44,000 packages, and Broken Tea 32,000 packages. A considerable increase has taken place for Pekoes in the range under 1s. 4d. Pekoes under 1s. 4d.

The indian Tea Districts Association have just issued their annual report. The increase in the home consumption of British-grown tea is very striking. The ica exported consists almost wholly of China, but the proportion cannot be specified, as no distinction is made in the Custom House returns between Indian and China Tea. The following are the quantities in lbs. for the past three seasons (June 1 to May 31):—

The last issue of the Deccan Punch, an Urdu paper published in Hyderabad, has a cartoon in which Moulvi Syed Yusuf-ud-din, late Secretary to the Sarf-i-kas board, and Assa Hushan Talukdar, are depicted holding Abdul Huq tightly by the arms while he is disgorging a stream of rupees. Dr. Aghornath stands with his hands in his coat pockets, superintending the operation and sternly calls out, "There is more in the stomach, there is more!" Dr. Aghornath was the president and Moulvi Yusuf-ud-din and Assa Hushen, Secretaries, of the organisation which protested against Abdul Huq's. Chanda Railway Scheme.

A CAWNPORE Missionary writes to the Pioneer complaining that so many of his Native Christians are without employment; this, too, in a town where labour of almost every kind is at a premium. As a matter of fact, there is plenty of employment to be got, but not for those who are idle, dissolute and irregular. The verdict of the Cawnpore overseer is that the Native Christian is with faw executions the most is that the Native Christian is, with few exceptions, the most troublesome class of workmen he has to deal with. One is reluctant to disparage the Missionaries who work with benevolent object of bettering the condition of their fellow-creatures in this world as well as the next. And yet there is no getting over the fact that the removal of caste restrictions seems, in the case of lower classes at any rate, to take away from the Native Christians the self-respect of his Hindoo brother, and give him in exchange nothing but the grosser characteristics of a new civilisation.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

INDIA

There are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing monthly (in Eombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian recople.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native cross. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men destrous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

THE CALCUTTA REVIEW.

(The only Quarterly Review in India.)

ESTABLISHED 1844.

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it... there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Statesman, October 1886.

. . . The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name —J. W. KAYE, Athenseum Club, June 23, 1872.

The Calcutta R view has given us valuable articles on the army. Sone from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophesy of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.— Address of the C.-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

... The Calcutta Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westminster Review.

J. B. DENT, Manager.

Wanted agents, at home and abroad, to obtain orders for watches and jowellery on our new instalment system, by weekly or monthly payments. Most beneficial to subscribers and agents, as money paid for rent of showy shops and shopmen are thus saved to members joining our instalment system. Also trustworthy men wanted in every ship, regiment, and battery to act as agents, to enable naval and military men to secure good, reliable watches at a small profit above the actual cost.

Naval and military agents when leaving the service, desirous of being appointed district agents or travellers, are inviced to apply for the post. Means of earning a good income were never before placed so easily in the reach of 'intelligent, energetic naval or military men leaving the service. Terms on application.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

THURSDAY, JUNE 7, 1888.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 22nd May; from Allahabad and Madras to the 20th May; and from Calcutta to the 19th May.

THE sitting in the House of Commons Select Committee on Hyderabad affairs was postponed on the Viceroy's recommendation that they should await the arrival of the delegates from that State in London.

In the latest news from Kabul, with dates to May 8th, no mention is made of any disturbance among the Jamshidis. The collision, therefore, near Maimena, in which the Salors were concerned, has evidently been the sole basis of the story which came to this country from England.

ABDUL Huo has offered to restore to the Hyderabad Government the sum of £158,631, which he took from it as the price of his own shares in the Mining Company. The Nizam has declined the offer.

THE Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab has arrived at Simla.

MR. E. T. ATKINSON, Accountant-General in Bengal, intends taking short leave in the course of the hot weather.

Mr. Baker, the engineer who recently examined the Mullagori route to Lundi Kotal, believes that it is practicable to make a good road, though not along the present hill track.

MR. J. G. Scott, Political Officer in the Southern Shan States, has just made an important capture in one Twet Nga Lu—a leader who has been fomenting disturbance in those parts for some time past. Mr. Scott heard of his being at Mone, and, making a sudden descent on the place, surprised and seized him.

THE Commissioners' report on the Larpent Case—a long and laborious piece of work—has gone in to the Government of India.

Under the new scheme for the reorganisation of the Judge Advocate-General's Department the establishment will consist of one Judge Advocate-General for all India, stationed at Army Headquarters, Simla, four Deputy Judge-Advocates, and six Assistants. Bombay and Madras will each have a Deputy Judge-Advocate at Army Headquarters, who will also be in charge of a circle. There will be nine circles for all India, including Burma, and officers will rank and be posted as follows:—Judge Advocate-General in India, Colonel Clementi; Deputy Judge-Advocates, Lieut.-Colonel Hughes-Hallett, at Ootacamund, with the Headquarters of the Madras Army and 1st Circle; Colonel Tytler, Poona, with the Headquarters of the Bombay Army and 2nd Circle; Colonel Mathews, Meerut, and Colonel Sanderson, Allahabad. The Assistant Judge-Advocates are Lieut.-Colonel Skinner, Secunderabad; Lieut.-Colonel Prideaux, Karachi; Lieutenant Chaplin, Mandalay; Captain Macmullen, Rawal Pindi; Captain Balfe, Simla; and Colonel G. Shaw, Mian Mir. For the present Colonel Sanderson will be posted to Simla and Captain Balfe to Allahabad.

THE Lieut.-Governor of Bengal has been in communication with the High Court regarding the Burrisal case, and has decided, with the concurrence of the Chief Justice, to postpone any action pending further examination into the general character of Mr. Posford's work as a Judge.

It has been authoritatively stated that the Bengal Government are not aware of any decision having been arrived at implying that the outrage committed on the Chittagong frontier, and which resulted in Lieut. Stewart and others being murdered, is to be allowed to go unpunished. The question of sending an expedition has not yet been fully considered by the Local Government.

A HINDU revival movement at Madras, consequent on the recent disturbances in the Christian College in that city, has been set afoot. A meeting, presided over by the Sheriff of Madras, was held on May 15, whereat it was resolved to invite subscriptions at once in order to raise Pacheappah's College to the standard of a first grade college which should impart instruction in the doctrines of the Hindu religion as well as in secular subjects.

THE latest news from Sikkim shows no change in the position of affairs. The weather was still severe, and snow occasionally falling.

THERE was an unusually late and heavy fall of snow in Kabul on May 2nd—a thing unknown for years.

UP to date cholera in Kashmir seems to be decreasing. The attacks in the last few days has been 400 and deaths 184; showing a decrease from 126 attacks daily to 80, and deaths from 62 to 37. Miss Hudson, a daughter of Major-General Sir John Hudson, was one of those attacked at an early period of the epidemic, but she is now rapidly recovering.

MR. EDWARD PHILIPSON-HARRISON, R.N.R, third officer of the P. and O. steamer Shannon, died at Bombay on May 17 from the effects of an overdose of laudanum which he had taken for insomnia without medical advice.

NOTES.

THE monsoon has brought us another Overland Mail quicker than was anticipated, but the papers to hand contain little fresh news from the East.

SEVERAL of the leading papers continue to occupy many columns of their space with discussions regarding the Hyderabad (Deccan) scandal, and one journal (the Statesman) gives a long account of some disclosures which it states it made in August, 1884, to Lord Ripon of the true nature of the Nizam's Railway Scheme and the Mining Concession.

An Allahabad paper says that affairs in the State of Gwalior are in a very unsatisfactory condition. "There is no unity among the higher officials, who mistrust each other. The bestowal of good appointments on his sons, nephews, and other relations by the Prime Minister is discreditable to him, especially as worthy men like Sir Michael Filose are passed over and posted in districts too remote for them to interfere. Rao Dinkur, one of the late Maharaja's soundest advisers, has left for Allahabad; Rao Gobind Rao Rughunath has been compelled to go; and, if the truth were known, there is more disorder, dacoity, &c., in Gwalior than is allowed to be made known to the public."

THE same journal says of a well-known Native sporting nobleman:—"The Maharaj Rana of Dholepore is away at Simla again, but to make a show of reduction of establishment is advertising a list of horses for sale at such prohibitive prices that he will have the use of them when he returns in December. This plan of clearing his debts is one which will not pay in the end. The deduction of 20 per cent. on all his debts as a compulsory condition has been very hard on some creditors who have waited years for their money and have charged market rates of interest. While these debts are being paid we would like to know how his Highness manages to purchase dogs and horses at fabulous prices from Jeypore merchants and others. Surely Major Martelli is asleep—or is he only nodding? Lately his Highness bought three boar-hounds, as they are called out here, for Rs. 3,500. He has this year bought some more for Rs. 5,000, and also some Hungarian horses.

THE row between the students and professors of the Madras Christian College is commented upon in various ways by the Press, Anglo-Indian and vernacular, but one paper puts the matter rather tersely. The Civil and Military Gazette remarks:—"When the attention of the large public which subscribes to evangelising Missions in India is fairly drawn to the recent occurrences in connection with the Madras Mission College, and when it begins to discern that the Hindu youth will accept anything from the hands of the missionary, excepting the Christian religion—which, after all, is the missionary's raison d'être—it will ask questions which may be fairly epitomised in the terse slang of the hour, 'Is it good enough?'"

It is a pity, but it is true, that in all parts of the world the graves of Englishmen who have fought and died for England are allowed to suffer neglect and go to decay. Many complaints were made about the graves of our soldiers in the Crimea, and it was a long time before public or private funds could be got together to put them into decent repair and preserve them. We now learn that the Rev. T. Bomford, of the Church Missionary Society, solicits subscriptions to a fund to enable him to restore the graves of the Englishmen who fell fighting before Mooltan in 1848-49. One hundred and eighty-six officers and men lost their lives and were buried in the vicinity, but only seventy-three graves are known, and these require attention. Among others that have been found are those of Colonel Pattoun and Major Gordon, 60th Rifles; Captains Brooke, Bailey, Keith, Erskine, Hollingsworth, and Monte-zambert, and Lieutenants Cubill, Thompson, Graham, Plumer, and others. Mr. Bomford has taken great trouble in searching for and renovating the graves, and as his appeals have not been greatly responded to, the expenditure has exceeded the sums collected.

THE Government of India has directed all Local Governments to promulgate the following rules regarding the pecuniary relations of Government officers with persons who are in any way under their official authority or influence, and to see that they are "strictly observed in future":—"All Covenanted Civil Servants, Statutory Civilians, Uncovenanted Officers, who hold gazetted appointments, and Military Officers in civil employ, are gazetted prohibited, under pain of dismissal, from taking loans from, or otherwise placing themselves under pecuniary obliga-tions to persons subject to the official authority or influence of such Government officers, or residing, possessing property, or carrying on business within the local limits for which such Government officers are appointed." The prohibition does not extend to transactions in the ordinary course of business with joint-banks or British firms.

THE Madras Mail says that nothing has occurred in Madras during the three days which have elapsed between the despatch of its Overland Edition of May 16th and the despatch of the present one of May 19th by "monsoon" mail. We find that little has been brought us by the "monsoon" mail from anywhere else in India, but we hope that the breeze which is so longed for has brought health and renewed energies to many of our panting friends on India's sultry plains.

ARTWARE from the Punjab has been supplied to Messrs. Finlay, Muir and Co. for the Glasgow Exhibition.

IT is reported that the Governor-General's Agent in Central India has recommended that direct commissions in the army should be granted to the three sons of the Badshah of Kunar; and that the Supreme Government want to know whether there is any chance of employment being found for the men in the Punjab.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS

THE SIMLA SEASON. (Pioneer Correspondent.)

SIMLA, MAY 9.

The men (and especially the women) of Simla are still in the condition of him who "never is, but always to be blest." Our social history of the past few days is a blank, but we have endless "pleasures" in prospect: That wave of cold wind—straight from Central Asia, as Mr. John Eliot assures me—has left use these for regions lab the trust transfer is will be -straight from Central Asia, as Mr. John Eliot assures mehas left us at last, for regions, let us trust, where it will be more welcome. We have May weather at last. Our May birds have all emerged from their hiding, and the calling craze is at its height. The dauntless few, who would have our world dance at any price, have encountered defeat once more, and their second scheme of Subscription Dances has fallen, if possible, more flat than the first. Fathers of families resolutely button their poor pockets and rusfully decline. But possible, more flat than the first. Fathers of families resolutely button their poor pockets and ruefully decline. But Major Cooper has come to the rescue with a "Small and Early," and, a little later, Colonel Mackenzie gives a ball at his beautiful house "The Crags." Of other "frivolling" there is more than plenty in store. Early in June the theatre at "Snowdon" will be thrown open for three performances in aid of the Homes in the Hills for Lady Roberts' Nursing Sisters, with certain promise of an attractive bill. Then Miss Toussaint, an accomplished performer on the piano, has announced an afternoon concert under Lady Dufferin's patronage, reminding us of those other Saturday "pops" of yore, which were among our most, in all senses, reasonable recreations.

General Elles and Colonel Collen, the General from a kick, and the Colonel from a touch of the sun, are both recovering, and the Colonel from a touch of the sun, are both recovering, I am glad to say. If the Adjutant-General were only a little more human, that subaltern's pony might seriously bar the future professional prospects of its owner.

Colonel Morton, as you know already, led the (theatrical) way with The Ladies' Battle, and now Simla will owe him the revival of the semi-permanent committee which fomerly, when Colonel Henderson, Major Deane and "our William" were in evidence, ruled our little world of Thespians so well. There was a gathering of ten good men and true at an early hour this morning, and the Simla Amateur Dramatic Club was then this morning, and the Simla Amateur Dramatic Club was then and there rough-hewn. In the course of that meeting some facts came out with regard to both the penalties and profits of catering for the theatre-loving public, which are worth the study of the Municipal Committee, should they still be of opinion that it is a real good thing. During the most successful season on record there were 25 performances; in an average season there are 20. The 25 yielded a small surplus, all told; the 20 yield a certain loss. Both those who have strutted their hour on the stage, and those who only care for it, may join the Club, which, by the way, aims at establishing a guarantee fund of Rs. 10,000, and has made a good beginning with it. At present the Municipal carriage stops the way, but the Executive Committee of the Club (Colonel Morton, Major Deane, Major Hamilton, A.D.C., and Mr. McCracken) have been deputed to confer with Mr. Cullen, the Chairman, about terms for a three years' tenure of the new Theatre, and Mr. Cullen is too conciliatory and sensible a man to stand out for anything unreasonable. Betsy will be the next play: then the Contrabandista: later on London Assurance, perhaps; later still Dandy Dick, and indeed such a string of sensation that there will be nothing left for your true disciple but to take his bed to the theatre and keep it there. It is really true that the roof of our new Town Hall leaks so that during a recent burst of rain it required 105 tubs to catch the water? I have this on the authority of the man who counted them. In this case one might usefully carry an umbrella as well as a charpoy. and there rough-hewn. In the course of that meeting some

There are still wild winds sweeping these hills, and even a few days of bright sunshine scarcely convince us that we are in the Merry Month, though we note that 100° and upwards one takes the shady side of the road, it is true, in the middle of the day; but there is a lingering doubt as to whether cheery fire is not good for us after sunset. I believe those who concern themselves with the mysteries of the monsoon, cyclonic whirls and areas of depression are not quite easy in their minds as regards the prospect of our next rainfall in India; but gloomy apprehensions are not yet quite in the ascendant, and we have another month before us in which to watch the development of the hot weather. Famine and scarcity are ugly words, and it is to be hoped that they will not even be whispered this year, much less proclaimed from the

The believers in "cycles" are, of course, turning up old records: is it 10 years, or 12 or 15, on which they will fix as deciding the eventful question of a failure of the rains? It seems to the ordinary observer that these "cyclists," to coin a new meaning to a word, are apt to change their theories as year after year passes, and so one does not put an all-abiding faith in their prophecies. They have some data undoubtedly to go upon, but the moonsoon current is at times so eccentric in its movements that they are nonplussed nine times out of ten. Where, for instance, is that beautiful theory about the snowfall in the Himalayas late in the Spring being the great controlling influence on the rainfall in Upper India? It has vanished for the time being; but perhaps it may be revived when some more than usually difficult drought problem puzzles our meteorologists.

But our concern the last few days has been rather in dust-clouds than rain-currents. You must almost be tired of hearing of Simla dust: it encrusts even the most secluded of our "little tin-gods on the mountain side," for nothing is sacred from its touch. It forms a sort of "dust-bore along the Mall just when the duties of calling have to be fulfilled, and it can no more be avoided or circumvented than the "bore" on a tidal river. One has to bow to its power and to wait for comfortable journeying until evening, when the wind drops and the sturdy little bullocks begin their work of relief with the jerky water-carts a benevolent Municipality provides. So could we, thanks to these, appear in decent array at Viceregal Lodge on Friday afternoon, Lady Dufferin's second reception of the season. But when pleasure has to be followed no one minds discomfort, and yesterday many of us journeyed Mushhobrawards and beyond, along hot and dusty roads; holiday-making in honour of that wonderful Sipi Fair which, of course, "everyone must see once." The were invitations in plenty to pic nics out among the Mushobra hills, and the Fair rather became of secondary importance, flying visits only being paid to it. It was not so only a few years ago, but the gathering has lost much of its distinctive character, and its prestige is rapidly fading. Even the rain-storms which were popularly supposed to mark the great day of the Fair have ceased to put in an annual appearance of late; and certainly no day in the year could have been sunnier than yesterday. The Native population of Simla still flock out in their hundreds, in all the glory of bright-coloured raiment; but they are only fellow-spectators after all, and we cannot get deeply interested in them. The scheme for a cart road to Mushobra and Fagu, by the way, seems never likely to be realised; "financfal pressure" is as severe up here as in any part of India, and we have still to pass through the Sanjaoli tunnel in our visits to the pleasantest suburb of Simla.

I have already told you of most of the coming events in our social world, and the list has not lengthened during the last few days. Is it not an article of our belief that until the Birthday Ball has taken place the floodgates of entertainment cannot be thrown open? But we are bestirring ourselves even now, and with visitors still arriving daily it is not likely that the charge of dulness will be entered against this season. Who was it that compared Simla to a Gladstone bag? It was an apt simile, and one may say that the sides are beginning to show signs of expansion even now; every blast of the tonga horn means another item of humanity stowed away for a few months in this receptacle of pilgrims from the plains. We may, indeed, be thankful that the evil fate which has overtaken Srinagar has not fallen upon Simla. There are residents who still remember the cholera scare not so many years ago: and Simla has become densely populated since then. We may well, indeed, pray that no epidemic may appear in our bazaars there.

The Volunteers have lost their popular Adjutant, Captain Craigie Halkett, who in a day or two will be on his way to that place of snow and mist, Gnatong, to join his regiment, the 32nd Pioneers, and assist in keeping a watchful eye on the Tibetans. On Friday evening he was given a farewell dinner at Peliti's by the officers of the corps, Colonel Morton, the Commanding Officer, presiding. Captain Halkett's health was proposed in very complimentary terms by Colonel Morton, and the guest of the evening was very happy in his reply. After alluding to the good terms on which he had been with officers and men Captain Halkett said he had one consolation, and that was that he left behind him a corps which he knew was second to none in India as regards drill, discipline, and marksmanship. He had always felt proud of being the Adjutant of such a smart and well-disciplined body of men. He modestly refrained from enlarging upon the steady advancement of the corps in numbers and its marked improvement in musketry; but expressed the hope that it would always maintain the high position it now held. Captain Halkett certainly did not say a word too much in praise of our Volunteers: they are a good all-round corps, and they pull together in a spirit of camaraderie which makes them hard to beat. Their new Adjutant, Lieutenant Hayden, is one of the crack-shots in India, and in musketry at least they are likely to still further improve under his guidance.

We have just lost another old resident: Colonel Filgate, R.E., having left us for good and all. He will be much missed among the large circle of friends whom he had made in Simla. The new Club seems to be settling down to serious business.

It has elected Colonel Mackenzie as its President, and Mr. R. G. Macdonald as Vice-President: both office-bearers who will work hard and unselfishly.

THE GARRISON IN BURMA.

(Pioneer.)

It must be borne in mind that the regular troops in Upper Burma are now garrisoning only 28 posts as compared with 138 last year; while the police hold 19 headquarters and 200 minor posts. The burden of maintaining order, therefore, falls mainly upon the 17,000 police sepoys, who really form the "second line" or subsidiary army of occupation. They are armed and equipped as if they were a portion of the Native Army, and they are men of fine physique, belonging to the martial races of India; but they lack the European leadership which has made the ordinary sepoy so efficient and so confident a soldier. Their training, too, has been of the scantiest kind, and their real strength lies in their personal courage and contempt of danger. During the past cold weather they have had the advantage of learning the art of guerilla warfare side by side with the troops, and they have undoubtedly profited by this; but now they have to stand alone in the majority of cases and to act on their own responsibility in the suppression of lawless-It must be borne in mind that the regular troops in Upper to act on their own responsibility in the suppression of lawless-ness. The danger seems to be that in the desire to give every village of importance some sort of protection the Civil autho-rities have rather erred on the side of establishing too many small posts told by ten or twenty men under a non com-missioned officer. This or that individual village may thus be rendered safe, but the main objects is to protect each district as a whole from such armed bands as may as-semble; and this cannot be done when the force available semble; and this cannot be done when the force available has been frittered away in a dozen different directions. The two British officers with each battalion cannot do more than keep up a perpetual round of inspections; and the force under their orders becomes one rather of a defensive than offensive character. The small police stockades scattered over the country can repel any attack that may be made upon them, but the garrisons are so small that they cannot act in concert; they are in fact extrinourly units of a certain local concert; they are, in fact, stationary units of a certain local value, but not so effective as they might be under a more elastic system. The remedy seems to lie in concentrating the police in each district in parties of such strength as shall make their offensive power clear and distinct in the eyes of the make their offensive power clear and distinct in the eyes of the dacoits. This may leave a village here and there apparently unprotected, where now it boasts a police guard, but it is the district as a whole which has to be controlled and not isolated spots. It can, of course, only be worked with any chance of success by temporarily increasing the number of European officers with the police tattalions, and this step should, we think, be taken without further delay. There are numbers of young and energetic officers who would volunteer for six months' duty with the Burna. who would volunteer for six months' duty with the Burma police, and their presence would unquestionably make that body more than equal to the trying work which it has to do. The revival of dacoity which was foretold has taken place: it can only be checked by so handling the 17,000 police sepoys that the withdrawal of some 10,000 troops shall not be felt as having made dangerous rents in the protective net which has been spread so carefully over the country.

PUNJAB ART. (Englishman.)

Lahore stands high among Indian cities as a centre of industrial art, and it is curious to find the Principal of the Mayo Art School, complaining that the low level of general intelligence is the worst drawback to the training of the students. "It is comparatively easy to get a geometrical problem understood or a prospective diagram drawn, but most difficult to secure an intelligent appreciation of real delicacy and truth in freehand drawing, or of an idea outside ordinary practice. There may be less to observe in an Indian town than in a European one, but the neglect of the faculty of observation by Punjab youths has other causes than the blankness of their surroundings." Nevertheless, the progress of the schools is encouraging, and several of the pupils have attained considerable skill in designing. One obtained a prize for a design for a carpet at the Simla Art Exhibition, and the design is being produced in a carpet manufactory in Annitsar. Students for the artisan class are less prone than others in India to suppose that a handicraft can be acquired without labour. Still they are at a disadvantage from their ignorance of the English tongue, and have frequently to take subordinate positions in consequence. Thus, they sometimes rank below clerks, tracers, and computors who do not possess a tithe of their skill, training, and aptitude. It is possible, however, to exaggerate the extent of this evil, and we may rely upon it that really excellent workmen will make their way in spite of all obstacles, and without the aid of a foreign language.

THE VOLUNTEER RESERVE.

(Indian Daily News.)

It was perhaps scarcely to be expected that the experience of 1885 would be repeated when the Government of India's tardy sanction to the Volunteer Reserve project was at last given, after three years' irritating delay. There is no immediate "Russian scare" just now to rouse enthusiasm, and it cannot be denied that the Government treated the original Reservists shabbily by ignoring their offers of service for so long. Accordingly, it is not to be wondered at that Major Sterndale has not been enabled to enrol again at once the whole of the "noble six hundred" who put down their names for reserve service three years since. For one thing, many will no doubt have left Calcutta in the in'erim. But the European and Eurasian population of the capital and its neighbourhood is scarcely on the decline; the places of those who have sought fresh fields of industry or adventure must have been filled by new-comers. Then some were annoyed by the unfortunate and ill-judged attitude of the Government towards the scheme, and we believe a few have replied to Major Sterndale's call to arms that, since they gave in their names in 1885, the Government has saddled them with "a most iniquitous Income-tax," and they don't feel disposed to volunteer for service any longer. But surely this is a hasty and regrettable way of looking at the matter. We fancy that those who adopt it will, on more careful consideration, change their minds. It is an Englishman's privilege to grumble, we know, and we are not going to say the Incometax is not enough to justify a liberal exercise of the privilege; but it is not like an Englishman to allow discontent to interfere with his patriotism, or deter him from fulfilling a public duty. And we thing every intelligent Englishman and Eurasian in India who gives serious thought to the subject must see that it is nothing short of a duty—it is a privilege, also—to fit himself to bear a manly part in defending the British possession of India in which he, as a resident in this country, has a direct personal interes

THE INDIAN WHEAT TRADE.

(Pioneer.)

The most notable paragraphs in the report just issued by the Bombay Chamber of Commerce deal with the attempts to purify wheat trade. The Bombay Chamber, like other Indian Chambers and mercantile corporations, believes that if anything is to be done it must be done at the London wharves; but only one Corn Trade Association in England has hitherto evinced any tendency to follow the Chamber's suggestions in adopting a lower scale of refraction for arrival contracts, and we are told gloomily that the "solitary and at best partial action on the part of the London Association has had no apparent effect." The Chamber then goes on to remark on the memorandum on the wheat trade prepared last year by Mr. Donald Smeaton. The real evil to be got rid of, Mr. Smeaton said, was the insecurity felt by traders and the consequent risk to the trade from the abuse of refraction at the Indian ports; and with a view to this end he advocated the establishment at the ports of an independent authority, to determine all questions of refraction and classification. Mr. Smeaton's opinion may be worth much or worth little; but it is evident he believed the duty of removing the present scandal from the wheat trade devolved on the Indian merchants quite as much as on the home buyers. The curious thing is that the Chamber practically makes this admission in commenting on another of the recommendations contained in the memorandum. Mr. Smeaton felt that insuperable difficulties lay in the way of establishing local depots for cleaning the wheat, and he accordingly expounded a scheme for the transport by rail and the shipment of wheat in bulk. The Bombay Chamber admit that Mr. Smeaton "proves to demonstration the practicability of his plans, and shows that a large saving of cost would be effected;" whereat our hopes are raised, only, alas! to be immediately damped by the lame and impotent conclusion that there is little hope of these excellent proposals "being adopted for a considerable time to come." A body of men actually engaged in a trade dec

CHARITY BEGGARS. (Times of India.)

The cool assumption of an English charitable society in sending out to the Viceroy a bundle of circulars begging for contributions with the request that the Government of India should distribute them among the Native Princes has been very properly snubbed. The Native Princes seem to be considered fair game for philanthropists and adventurers alike. If the Princes are to be inveigled into subscribing to the funds of every charitable soup-kitchen or Dorcas society in England they will be as surely-ruined by the lambs of society as by the wolves in lamb's clothing. We use the word "inveigled" deliberately, for however praiseworthy be the object of this particular society which has drawn forth the Viceroy's righteous rebuke, it was unquestionably a piece of sharp practice to endeavour to have its begging card hall-marked by the authority it would have derived from being forwarded by the Indian Government. As the Viceroy truly points out, this would have been to bring illegitimate influence to bear upon the Native Chiefs. The latter almost invariably construe a Government request, even though indirectly preferred, as an order; and in a recent case we have had a flagrant example of a purely private letter from an august Royal personage being produced at the Court of a Native State and used—successfully used—as a means of bringing pressure to bear towards enforcing a claim which, on its inherent merits, was very dubious indeed. This is little short of a public scandal, and the sooner begging letter-writers, whether their motives be altruistic or egoistic, be warned off the field of Native States the better. There are too many Montague Tiggs with their Anglo-Bengalee Disinterested Loan and Life Insurance enterprises on the ground already; the Jellybys with their Borrioboola-Gha projects on no account can be allowed a footing. We quote the concluding sentence from Lord Dufferin's reference to the subject, and commend the words of sound common-sense to all charity exploiters at home:—"The Governor-General is of opinion t

SIND AND THE PUNJAB. (Bombay Gazette.)

Sir John Gorst's answer to a question that was put to him in the House of Commons on Friday, May 18th, in reference to the much-discussed transfer of Sind to the Punjab shows that we were right in refusing to accept the confident assertions of the up-country papers as to the certainty and imminence of that change. It was known to the well-informed that the Government of India were once more moving in the matter, and that if they had their way the scheme would this time be carried through without delay. But it was forgotten by the imperfectly informed that the India Office had a voice in the matter which, in spite of its leanings in the past towards a disturbance of the map, might be given on the other side, and there seemed to us, as is now shown to be the case, good reason for treating the question as still open—still one on which argument could be used without being wasted. We will not speculate upon the reasons which may have influenced the India Office to change the attitude which it held in regard to this question in 1876, when Lord Salisbury suggested—as only one of at least four courses that were open to discussion, it should be remembered—the transfer of Sind to the Punjab. Every year that passed since the Government of India declared for that particular course without carrying it out constituted a new reason against the change, and to the open mind of Lord Cross it may well have seemed that if those who wanted the transfer twelve years ago were not sufficiently impressed with its urgency to carry it out then, the reasons for insisting upon it now are not very strong. Two versions of the Under-Secretary of State's announcement on the subject have reached India, and we have our choice between a statement that the transfer cannot be made without the sanction of the Government of India, and one that the Home Government would not assent to it. The former version has this against it—that the Government of India are known to favour the change, and that to speak of their sanction being necessary would be super which would have given the Central Provinces to Bombay. The Government of India, unless they rise to a height of disinterestedness not easy for them to attain to, are not likely to propose a scheme which would deprive them of so large a share of patronage as that, and it is more than possible that in this way they will defeat the purpose that they have at

(Pioneer.)
From a small village on the banks of the Ghogra opposite Daryabad, there comes to us a tale such as even in the dark annals of Indian witchcraft and demon-worship has not often been paralleled. In this village there lived, until a few weeks ago, a tenant farmer, by name Bajrang, with his wife Bachi. Bachi, from all accounts, was a young woman of excellent character and conduct, but subject to fits of insanity and mecharacter and conduct, but subject to fits of insanity and melancholia. An attack of this sort occurred on the 12th of last month, when she fell a prey to the delusion that she was possessed by a female spirit, Bhowani. Thereupon her husband also seems to have been seized by a mad frenzy. A female spirit, he told the villagers, had come to his wife, and now, in order that he might be able to exorcise the unearthly visitant, a male deity, Bhairon, had come to him. Thus divinely directed he was to tear out his wife's eyes, and the god Bhairon was to replace them by golden ones. The whole village, instead of laying hold of the wretched Bajrang and putting him where he could do no harm, seem to have put complete faith in his inspiration, and assembled to the number of about fifty, with singing of songs assembled to the number of about fifty, with singing of songs and beating of tom-toms, within the enclosure of Bajrang's compound, to witness the fearful rite of exorcism. Thither the ill-fated Bachi was brought by her demented husband, who threw her down on the ground, and, while three of the neighbours, a manand two women, pinioned the helpless creature's arms and legs, gouged out her eyes with his forefinger. Bachi lingered an hour before death put an end to her sufferings; the villagers returned to their homes apparently unconscious that anything extraordinary had been done; and the village chowkidar—excellent specimen of his class—reported two days afterwards that the woman had died of cholera. Luckily hints of the truth got abroad, an inquiry was held, and Bajrang and the man and two women who pinioned the murdered Bachi, will be committed to the Sessions Judge. Their punishment, however, is of little account in comparison with the astounding evidence the story affords of the depths of barbarous superstition in which, despite long years of British rule, British preaching and British education, the rural population of India are still sunk. Yet of such as farmer Bajrang is a vast portion hour before death put an end to her sufferings; the villagers reare still sunk. Yet of such as farmer Bajrang is a vast portion of the free and independent electorate whom we are asked to charge with the duty of sending members to the great Indian Parliament, which is to govern the Empire of the future on really true and enlightened principles.

A CALCUTTA WOMEN'S HOSPITAL. (Indian Daily News.)

There should be no difficulty in raising the small amount required, in addition to the subscriptions already paid and promised towards that object, for building a Women's Hospital at Calcutta to take the place of the present Countess of Dufferin's Fund Dispensary, in Circular Road. Indeed the Executive Committee of the Bengal Branch of the Fund would seem to be too modest in their estimate of the needs would seem to be too modest in their estimate of the needs of the city when they place the cost of a suitable Women's Hospital at Rs. 40,000. Or is their moderation due to the small and unflattering estimate they entertain of the giving spirit—as apart from capabilities—of the wealthy people of Calcutta? There is, on the face or the matter, sufficient justification for such an opinion. Calcutta is wofully deficient in monuments of public-spirited private beneficence, as, compared, say, to Bombay. We are disposed sometimes to smile at Bombay's arrogant assumption of every virtue; but the western city has certainly cause to be proud of the many substantial testimonials it possesses of the most catholic and most liberal-hearted charity on the part of individual citizens. Conspicuous instances are the Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy Hospital, the Goculdass Tejpal Hospital, the Cama Hospital for Women and Children, the Dimbhai Hospital for Animals; and another munificent donation has been made foradding obstetric wards to munificent donation has been made for adding obstetric wards to the Jamsetjee Hospital. There is no lack, at the same time, of special sectional benefactions, designed to benefit poor and suffering people of particular communities; but we are refering, particularly to charity of a more catholic description. Compare the list enumerated above with similar tokens of an compare the list enumerated above with similar tokens of an enlightened generosity possessed by Calcutta, and the capital must "take a back seat." Compare the splendid Cama Hospital for Women and children at Bombay with such a building as the Bengal Committee are likely to get built for forty thousand rupees! The Cama Hospital has not been found a bit too big for its purpose, and there is little doubt but that double or treble forty thousand rupees might be very usefully expended in building a suitable Women's Hospital for Calcutta, to be managed on similar lines. Will not some Calcutta counterpart of the Goculdasses, the Jeejeebhoys, the Camas, the Pettis, and the Wadias of Bombay—there are plenty of them with money enough—come forward with an offer that will enable the Bengal Committee to build a hospital worthy of the capital? It is a pitiful thing that with such an object in view as the erection of a hospital for suffering women, where they may be attended by trained woman ing women, where they may be attended by trained woman doctors, it should be necessary to talk of applying to the Dufferin Memorial Committee for a grant from subscriptions intended for another object.

COLONIAL AND INDIAN RETRENCHMENTS. (Pioneer.)

We noticed last autumn that in New Zealand a new administration pledged to retrenchment had been formed. According to familiar Indian precedent we should have expected a solemn and strongly - worded resolution, impressing on local administrations the gravity of the situation, and the necessity of renewed and more minute cheeseparing in every direction. of renewed and more minute cheeseparing in every direction. After much consumption of ink and paper, sundry chuprassis would have been dismissed, a few clerks got rid of, much havoc played with the allowances of the less-favoured branches of the Service, the novel principle now being successfully worked of making a junior do a senior's work merely for the honour and glory of an empty title, would have been still further extended, and the difficulty of obtaining the most necessary grants for routine expenditure would have been increased to the verge of an impossibility. But in New Zealand they begin at the other end. The Governor is to get in future only a pittance of £1,000 a year, instead of £7,500 as previously. The Premier is to come down from £1,750 to £1,000 and the other Minister from £1,250 to £800, while one Minister is to be abolished altogether. Consolidated travel Minister is to be abolished altogether. Consolidated travel allowances, which appear to have been just as much appreciated there as they are elsewhere, are to go; and the allowance is to be arranged so as merely to recoup necessary outlay, and that only within a narrow Budget allotment. Where official residences are to be provided, the cost to Government is to be limited to the actual maintenance of the fabric. The allowance to Members of Barliament is to be get fabric. The allowance to Members of Parliament is to be cut down to £100 a year; the number of Members of both Houses is to be largely reduced; and there are to be other reductions in the Civil Service, confined, however, to officials drawing over £150 per annum. In this way it is intended to arawing over £150 per annum. In this way it is intended to effect a saving of some £300,000 a year, and this having been done, the curtailment of current expenditure is considered. This is a self-denying ordinance of a thorough-going type, and it is a striking testimony to the patriotism of the Colonists that it has been adopted in its entirety. It is impossible not to think of the flutter there would have been in the official dovecotes had the recommendations of our own Financial Commission been conceived in a similar heroic strain. Perhaps, as the rupee slowly and silently vanishes away, we may come to something like it yet.

THE CASE OF MR. TAYLER.

The Indian Statesman publishes the following letter:-The charges that were brought against Mr. Tayler, the Commissioner of Patna, were two:—

That he persecuted the Wahabees.

II. That he persecuted the wanabees.

II. That he showed great want of firmness and calmness by ordering all Europeans to withdraw from their mofussil stations, and to fall back upon Patna.

About the first, opinion does not differ. Subsequent events proved that his denunciation of the Wahabees was just, that one of the men whom he arrested in his dining-room, and who was read a denutry real found deeply implicated in a was made a deputy collector, was found deeply implicated in a was made a deputy collector, was found deeply implicated in a conspiracy against the Government, and was sentenced to transportation for life to the Andamans. About the second, there are people who assert that the charge of "panic" and want of calmness was sufficiently established against him, though at the same time they think his punishment undeservedly severe. Now, to judge of Mr. Tayler's order, we must look at the circumstances by which he was surrounded. All around was disaffection, and reliable reports came that the rich men were helping to fan the flame of rebellion. The fate of Arrah was certain, and only the gallantry of the garrison at that place was staying the rebels from falling upon other centres of the division. Dunbar's regiment met a great disaster on their march staying the rebels from falling upon other centres of the division. Dunbar's regiment met a great disaster on their march to the rescue of Arrah, and they had retreated. Officers from all parts were imploring succour. What was his possible course at that time? He could not unnecessarily squander English lives by asking them to fight against odds. So he passed the order to withdraw all the mofussil establishments with their treasuries, unless by doing so their personal safety would be endangered. At this time, at Gaya, the district magistrate was Mr. Money. On receipt of this order, he at once determined to leave the station, though there was very little danger then. At first he did not take the treasure with him. But after going about three miles, he was shown the un-English character of his flight by one Mr. Hollings, of the Opium Department. He returned to his station, found the treasure untouched, took it in carts and brought it safely to Calcutta, not to Patna, for he apprehended danger on the way to that city. In the meantime Sir (then Mr.) Vincent Eyre, who was going to Allahabad with a regiment, halted at Dinapore. On hearing of the miserable condition of his countrymen at Arrah, he started on his own responsibility to rescue them, and was successful. This victory of Eyre at once changed the aspect of affairs in Behar. Rebels became scarce and the division was safe. Now came the turn of Mr. Halliday to exercise freely his revenge on Mr. Tayler. The latter was an officer of the old stamp, who was not very respectful to his superiors and inclined to act on his own responsibility and without the previous approval of his Government. This irritated the Lieutenant-Governor, and on the disappearance of the danger Tayler was made to suffer. But even Mr. Halliday did not succeed in ruining him without suppressing the fact that he had asked all the district officers to bring the treasure with them unless by doing so their personal safety would be endangered.

THE PROPOSED TRANSFER OF SIND.

(Pioneer.)

While Bombay, the Punjab, and the Central Provinces are disputing about the terms upon which Sind should change hands, that province itself can scarcely be expected not to enter some protest against its fate being summarily decided. The general impression has been for years past that Sind wanxious to be absorbed in the Punjab, as Karachi would then be released from the jealous supervision which Bombay was supposed to exercise over its affairs. But within the last few weeks certain sections of the citizens of Karachi have shown signs of discontent at the prospect of any change, and now we have an influential Mahomedan resident denouncing both Bombay and the Punjab, and demanding the autonomy of Sind as a Chief Commissionership under the Government of India. Mr. Hasan Ali Effendi, presiding at a recent meeting of the local Mahomedan Association, complained that Sind had been exploited by Bombay, and that the interests of the Mahomedans, who form more than 78 per cent. of the whole population, had been wholly disregarded. "The disintegration of their society, the decadence of their principal families, and the general ruin which had overtaken them" were due to the influence excited by the "powerful Hindus that circle round the Bombay Government." The officials who were sent from the Western Presidency were in sympathy with the Hindu races among whom they had spent a period of their lives, and were thus inclined to favour them at the expense of the Mahomedan community. The third count in the indictment was that Bombay had introduced its own ryotwari system and its "odious and cruel" Revenue Code, which had practically ruined many landholders. Mr. Hasan Ali Effendi is apparently a responsible person, as Lord Reay consulted him last year regarding the prospects of the agricultural classes, so we take it that case Sind is certainly under no debt of gratitude to Bombay.

• DIAMONDS IN INDIA. (Madras Mail.)

A correspondent writes:—" Diamond mines have been known to exist in several localities in India often far removed, and many of these mines were, and are to this day worked by the Natives. Golconda once gave employment to some 60,000 men, and the vast extent of the old working amply testifies to the amount of labour expended on them. Diamonds are sometimes found in river beds, and sometimes on the surface, and are all more or less rounded, a sign of having been transported great distances by water. The diamond mines of India hitherto known all bear a close resemblance to one another. Situated from six to twenty feet below the surface, the beds in which the gems are found are seldom more than twelve inches thick, composed of a reddish gravel, sand, and round pieces of rock. These beds have all the characteristics of an aqueous deposit, and no diamonds are found either above or below them. The stones found in these beds are certainly not in their original home; they have been transported, and deposited in their present position. Whence they come geologists have not yet been able to tell us. On the discovery of the Kimberley and other mines in South Africa, it was believed that the diamonds found there were in their original matrix, and that those found scattered about the country had been transported from these mines during successive ages by rains and floods. The South African mines are only a few acres in extent, and the 'pipe' formation prevails, that is to say, the appearance of the mines is that of the crater of an extinct volcano, with perpendicular rocky sides. The basin, or interior, is composed of the now celebrated 'blue clay,' which contains the diamonds. The Kimberley Mine has been worked to a depth of some 500 feet and borings have been made to a much greater depth, but there is no diminution in the quantity of diamonds. On the contrary, the deeper the excavations are carried the larger are the gems found. It remains to be seen whether the mine of the Madras Presidency Diamond Mines Co., Ld., which is reported to have a closy resemblance to the great South African mines, will account for the presence of the diamonds found scattered, and in beds, in Southern India as the South African mines have accounted for their presence in South Africa, often at great distances from the mines."

PATRIOTISM AS A PROFESSION IN BENGAL. (Englishman.)

Really Babu Sourendronath Bannerjee is too modest. He ordered the Health Officer to efface himself, and to hold his tongue about the African state of the Calcutta jungle; he desires the Government of India to be good enough to lose no time in appointing a Committee to investigate the shocking life to which the coolie is condemned in Assam, as is revealed in the veracious and blood-curdling tales which form a staple of the native Press; and now he peremptorily "calls the attention" of Sir Steuart Bayley to the iniquitous police circular which frightened the Mirror so lamentably some time ago. The Babu proceeds in a beautiful spirit of humility to lecture the Lieutenant-Governor on the insecure nature of the British tenure in India, and the value of the support and sympathy of the Bengalis, which, it is broadly hinted, the Government cannot afford to sacrifice. "An English Government cannot afford to sacrifice. "An English Government cannever regard with suspicion the growth of political or religious feeling. Whatever political feeling has been evoked in this country is the work of Government," while the "most remarkable developments of religious feeling are likewise due to the civilising agencies which the Government has created for the advancement of the people." But, alas, the fair dream of civilising Bengal is at an end. "The publication of the police circular has already created a most painful impression on the public mind. The public feel that they are the objects of suspicion on the part of the Government, that their religious and political movements are watched, that they cannot make a political speech or deliver a religious discourse without being tracked by the police official or reported by him; and suspicion must needs beget suspicion. They feel that the Government has no confidence in them, or they would not be watched, and it is only in human nature to reciprocate the feeling. The Committee need hardly dwell upon the disastrous consequences which such a state of things is likely to engender. The Bri loyalty and contentment of the people."

In short, the tender-hearted much-enduring Babu, out of sheer gratitude to his benefactors, shows a way of escape for the Empire from a disastrous doom, and that way is the withdrawal of the police circular. If the circular is not cancelled, the Babu trembles to think of the result. The experiences which have so wrought upon his imagination are deserving of notice. "Soon after the delegates from Bengal who had been to the National Congress at Madras had returned, the police of Maimansingh were inquiring as to who had paid for the expenses of the delegates who had gone down to Madras—whether they were defrayed by the public or by the delegates themselves. To say the least, the inquiry was impertinent, and it was annoying to those who at considerable sacrifice had performed what they believed to be a patriotic duty." Again, we are informed, the Indian Association, "in the performance of their self-imposed duties are constantly obliged to depute delegates to different parts of the country Quite recently a delegate of the Association had occasion to visit a town in the mufasal where his presence was made the subject of police inquiries to such an extent that people were afraid to receive him at their houses; for no one, naturally enough, wanted to be the object of police espionage." Of course, it is always exasperating to be found out; and when a guileless Babu takes a holiday trip to Madras and pays his own expenses, it is a pity he cannot call himself a "Delegate" if he chooses, and pose as the elected "representative" of Maimansingh. Further, it is annoying that the Indian Association cannot continue to radiate "delegates" in all directions in absolute reliance of a ready welcome. The light thrown by Babu Sourendronath on the tactics of his Association is extremely interesting, and is not likely to be forgotten. But the Babu omits to mention a more recent illustration of the prejudicial effect of this vile circular. During the demonstration in honour of the Viceroy, an at tion in the mofussil. Matters even proceeded some length, and telegrams began to pour in regarding the crowded and enthusiastic meetings that were being held in the towns and villages to express the true sentiments of the country, which, as reported, were far from complimentary to the Government. Acting on the impression that the local authorities, under their new instructions, must know all about these meetings, we attempted to verify the statements sent to us by telegram; but, strange to say, the system of "espionage" had entirely failed. The enthusiastic and influential meetings, condemnatory of Lord Dufferin and all his works, were plain enough on paper, but the utmost efforts of the police entirely failed to discover that such meetings had ever been held. It was discovered, however, that an envoy of a Calcutta Native paper who had tried to get up a meeting at Krishnagar had been driven to flight by the people. Was this envoy a Deputy also of the Indian Association, engaged in the fulfilment of its self-imposed but patriotic mission? Really, if the obnoxious circular is not cancelled, the business of the Bengal patriots, a calling which does not love the light, will be seriously endangered.

SIRDAR DILER JUNG'S OFFER. (Bombay Gazette.)

Our Hyderabad correspondent gives details of the offer of the Sirdar Diler Jung to make financial reparation for the outlay incurred by the Nizam's Government in the purchase of shares in the Deccan Mining Company. On Saturday, May 19, an official notification was served upon the suspended Home Secretary by the Government, requiring him to repay the sum of £151,631 disbursed at his instance in that transaction. The Sirdar having taken advice, has decided to repay the whole amount, if his Highness's Government will, in consideration of his making that restitution, refrain from any further proceedings, and will abstain from cancelling the concession of mining rights which was disposed of to the Deccan Mining Company. The Hyderabad Government decline to accele to these conditions; and there the matter rests for the moment. To-day (May 22) the Nawab Mohsin-ul-Mulk will arrive in London, armed with plenary powers. He has authority either to cancel the concession, or to confirm it with such modifications as may secure the right of the Hyderabad Government, while safeguarding the interests of innocent shareholders. That Mr. Watson and his partners in the concession may find it expedient to take a course similar to that which has recommended itself to the Sirdar is not at all improbable. The fact that Mr. Watson has employed the time left him before the commencement of the investigation by the Committee of the House of Commons to repurchase the founders' shares in the market, is an indication of a desire to be prepared for the worst. He obviously foresees that the shares may be cancelled, and he providently buys them back at £7 10s. or even at £8 each, so that he may not have to refund the £10 or the £12 10s. at which he sold the shares and the £7 10 or £8 at which he has providently bought them back. The consideration shown by the Sirdar in endeavouring to stipulate that the concession shall not be cancelled is the more touching, seeing that the concessionaires did not consider the Sirdar's interests for a moment when cessionaires did not consider the Sirdar's interests for a moment when their own were in jeopardy.

The Government of Hyderabad having refused to entertain the offer on the part of the Sirdar Diler Jung to repay the money of the State expended in the purchases of shares in the Mining Company, the conditions being inadmissible, legal proceedings will be taken, as already intimated, to attach the property of the Sirdar in the city and Presidency of Bombay. The proposals submitted to the Nizam's Government would, if accepted, have secured for the concessionaires the whole of the £850,000 worth of shares which they appropriated, and of those shares the Sirdar possesses one-fourth, if Mr. Wilson's avowal be accepted as true. The shares were by last accounts selling at £8 each in the London market, Mr. Watson buying up as many of them as he could, lest, if cancelled as fraudulent, he should be compelled to pay the par value and the premium at which he sold to "the sixteen hundred victims." Now it does not require any great knowledge of figures to understand that even at £8 a share, the Sirdar's one-fourth of the eighty-five thousand shares would yield him eighty per cent. of the handsome sum of £212,500, that is to say, £163,125. If there were no longer any question as to the validity of the shares, they might conceivably go up to par, or even once more to a premium, in which case the Sirdar would profit largely by the operation, while the Hyderabad State would have parted with its mining rights to the concessionaires for nothing. The recovery of the £151,631 paid for oneighth of the shares would be but a very inadequate indemnification for the injury sustained. Further, the proposed stipulation that all further proceedings should be stayed would secure the Sirdar against any claim that may arise in connection with the floating of the Railway Company. It is asserted that, in addition to the £83,000 received from the Nizam's Government for his services in that transaction, the Sirdar obtained, without the knowledge of his Government, £100,000 of the capital subscribed in London. This allegation could not even be made the subject of inquiry, if the repayment of the amount expended on the purchase of the shares were to close the accounts between the Nizam's Government and its financial agent and stay all further proceedings.

BENGAL.

Mr. E. T. ATKINSON, Accountant-General in Bengal, intends taking short leave in the course of the hot weather.

The Bengal Chamber of Commerce has replied to Mr. O'Conor's memorandum answering Mr. Steele's criticisms on the official trade statistics for Bombay and Calcutta. The Chamber expresses satisfaction at the assurance of Government that it is their desire to make the published returns of trade of as much value as possible to the mercantile community, but say Mr. Steele expressed an opinion strongly held by the Chamber and the mercantile community generally when he stated that the statistical returns were of a misleading nature, and the Chamber see nothing in Mr. O'Conor's Note to lead them to modify that opinion. On the contrary, his explanation strengthens the Chamber's complaint, and proves that it was time such a complaint should be made. It is no answer to a merchant, who finds tables confuse instead of assist him to say they follow a prescribed form which was explained, more than five years ago, and the Chamber suggests that the tables be altered so as to show gross instead of net tonnage. The conditions of trade in Calcutta and Bombay differ so radically that no useful comparison between them is possible any more than between London and New York. It is practically impossible to ascertain the true volume of trade of these two cities, and therefore nothing can justify the conclusions repeated year by year by Mr. O'Conor in his review of the trade of India. The Chamber then proceeds to remark that it cannot see what purpose is served by attributing to Bombay the pre-eminence which Mr. O'Conor's nows in his paragraph 11. A fallacious view obtains of the proper form of reporting imports of bullion. Bullion is imported into India, and Council Bills on India are purchased for the purpose of redressing the balance of trade; but neither the one nor the other is properly trade. The larger part of the treasure imported comes for convenience to Bombay, just as the bulk of Council Bills come to be paid at the Calcutta Treasury. Neither item should be included in any comparison of them attract attention in Europe and Amer

MADRAS.

Death of a Recently-Retired Deputy Collector.—We regret to learn of the death, in Madras, of Mr. N. Gopalakristnama Chetty, after an illness of twelve days, and within two months of his retirement on a well-earned pension of Rs. 250. A correspondent writes:—"He was well known as an energetic, able, honest, and conscientious public officer, who always had the courage of his convictions. The greatest portion of his public service—more than fifteen years as Deputy Collector—was spent in the Kirnool District, where his name is cherished to this day with fond affection by the rural population as their good old friend, and he was credited with such an intimate acquaintance with the district that he was entrusted with the compilation of a Manual of that district—a task which he accomplished with credit so far as the meagre District Records permitted him. He was also a good Telugu scholar, and has left behind him a few literary works in Telugu to perpetuate his memory. Notably amongst these may be mentioned a popular tale entitled, 'Sriranga Raja Charitra,' illustrative of native manners and customs." The following is the record of his services:—(Born about March 3rd, 1833.)—Deputy Inspector of Schools, Madras, 1st May, 1857; Telugu Translator, 1st March, 1859; Third English Clerk, Collector's Office, Nellore, 27th May, 1861; Acting Translator, Collector's Office, 1st September,

A NATIVE ON ENGLAND.—The Ferozepore correspondent of the Civil and Military Gazette, writing on the 10th ult., says:—
"Lately two old warriors of the Punjab Cavalry passed through here. Both these grand men had been to England at the Jubilee rejoicings, and it does one good to hear the account they give, and how they have been made so much of. The following are extracts from their sayings:—I wondered that Her Imperial Majesty's neck was not tired when she nodded continually in answer to enthusiastic greetings from large crowds in the streets of London for four miles. I went to see my old Commanding Officer in Scotland, and both the sahib and his memsahib gave me a room in their own house, and sat with his mensahib gave me a room in their own house, and sat with me talking till late, and looked after me most affectionately. me talking till late, and looked after me most affectionately. The day I had to ride in full uniform, an excellent English horse was provided for me as Native Orderly Officer to his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, and a sahib by mistake got upon my horse. He was a big sahib, but he had to come down pretty sharp when the officer in charge told him to dismount, as the horse was for an Indian officer! I used to think all the sahibs were very foolish in spending so much of their earnings for a trip to their billait, which could not be possibly better than the Punjab; but I had to change my opinion after once having seen the billait, where I spent the best twenty-nine days of my life in this world. But—well, it is true—only hoary-headed Punjabis like myself of this sort (stroking his grey beard) should go there; it is no place for young men."

SIVA.

" Mors Janua Vitæ."

I am the God of the sensuous fire That moulds all Nature in forms divine;
The symbols of death and of man's desire,
The springs of change in the world, are mine;
The organs of birth and the circlet of bones, And the light loves carved on the temple stones.

I am the lord of delights and pain,
Of the pest that killeth, of fruitful joys;
I rule the currents of heart and vein; A touch gives passion, a look destroys; In the heat and cold of my lightest breath Is the night incarnate of Lust and Death.

If a thousand altars stream with blood Of the victims slain by the chanting priest,
Is a great God lured by the savoury food?
I reck not of worship, or songs, or feast;
But that millions perish, each hour that flies, Is the mystic sign of my sacrifice.

Ye may plead and pray for the millions born;
They come like dew on the morning grass;
Your vows and vigils I hold in scorn,
The soul stays never, the stages pass;
All life is the play of the power that stirs
In the dance of my wanton worshippers.

And the strong swift river my shrine below
It runs, like man, its unending course
To the boundless sea from eternal snow;
Mine is the Fountain—and mine the Force
That spurs all nature to ceaseless strife;
And my image is Death at the gates of Life.

In many a legend and many a shape,
In the solemn grove and the crowded street
I am the slayer, whom none escape;
I am Death trod under a fair girl's feet; govern the tides of the sentient sea That ebbs and flows to eternity.

And the sum of the thought and the knowledge of man Is the secret tale that my emblems tell;
Do ye seek God's purpose, or trace His plan?
Ye may read my doom in your parable;
For the circle of life in its flower and its fall Is the writing that runs on my temple wall.

O Race that labours, and seeks, and strives, With thy Faith, thy wisdom, thy hopes and fears, Where now is the Future of myriad lives? Where now is the Creed of a thousand years? Far as the Western spirit may range, It finds but the travail of endless change;

For the earth is fashioned by countless suns, And planets wander, and stars are lost, As the rolling flood of existence runs From light to shadow, from fire to frost. Your search is ended, ye hold the keys, Of my inmost ancient mysteries.

Now that your hands have lifted the veil, And the crowd may know what my symbols mean, Will not the faces of men turn pale
At the sentence heard, and the vision seen

Of strife and sleep, of the soul's brief hour, And the careless tread of unyielding Power?

Though the world repent of its cruel youth,
And in age grow soft, and its hard law bend, Ye may spare or slaughter; by rage or ruth All forms speed on to the far still end; For the gods who have mercy, who save or bless, Are the visions of man in his hopelessness.

Let my temples fall, they are dark with age, Let my idols break, they have stood their day; On the deep hewn stones the primeval sage Has figured the spells that endure alway My presence may vanish from river and grove, But I rule for ever in Death and Love.

THE NATIONAL REVIEW.*

The "Peers' Eldest Son" question again comes to the front in the first two articles in the present issue of the National. If Viscount Wolmer writes in a somewhat flippant style—a fault which experience will correct—there is no lack of plain common-sense in his paper. The quarrel of Democrats with the House of Lords concerns, not only its present constitution, (for only the extremest Radicals dispute the necessity of a Second Chamber in some shape), but its apparent inactivity for more than half the Session, an inactivity which almost every Government has found it expedient occasionally to insert the late Lord Derby's companied irreventant. for more than half the Session, an inactivity which almost every Government has found it expedient occasionally to interrupt by—to use the late Lord Derby's somewhat irreverent phrase—"giving the Lords a gallop." Viscount Wolmer wisely points out that the Lords could find plenty of work, and of most useful work, and "plenty of power of a 'certain kind without treading in the least on the toes of the Commons. Take," says he, "one branch of influence, select committees; those of the Lords are celebrated for their efficiency; but why are there not more of them? ... At any rate, they make work, and create influence; why, then, are (is) the great bulk of inquiries left to the Commons to initiate?" As to the brilliant part which members of the Hereditary Chamber have played, from the earliest ages, in English history, few readers of this journal need information; but it is right that historical facts of importance should, from time to time, be presented aftesh to the mind; and Mr. Burney may be assured that he has done well in insisting on the "Patriotism of our Hereditary Peerage." The glorious deeds of the aristocracy, who have so often approved themselves truly "rulers of men," have been in no country more conspicuous than in our own.

The sufferings, and the manifold difficulties, of the poor, are considered in three Papers, all by members of the "ministering angel" sex. In that which first merits notice, Miss Jeune writes with well-deserved sympathy on the obstacles which the poor encounter in spiritual matters. She will not admit that they are lost in the vortex of infidelity. "A belief in the justice of God and the existence of Heaven is," she thinks, "the epitome of the faith of the poor. The personality of Christ is a very real conception to "them; while "to love God and do your duty to your neighbour is," she maintains, their "daily practice and desire." Without underrating the beneficial efforts of others, she is convinced "that there never was a time in this century when the Church of England rating the beneficial efforts of others, she is convinced "that there never was a time in this century when the Church of England was stronger, or more thoroughly the Church of the people, than at this moment.

The queries how, and how far, the temporal wants of the most indigent classes are met under the present administration of the indigent classes are met under the present administration of the Poor Law, form the subject of consideration in an interesting Essay by Miss L. Twining, than whom few have a better right to attentive hearing on such a matter. That the "moral fibre" of the poor "is weakened" by the existence of a legal—all but unconditional—right to claim relief, no one will dispute. And that the right (say of an army pensioner, p. 525) to discharge himself from the Union (to receive his pension), and to return "destitute in a few days or hours," requires considerable restriction, there can be little doubt. These are, however, matters with which wise legislation may be trusted to cope. What cannot well be touched by legislation is the character of the individuals of whom Boards of Guardians are usually composed. It is perfectly notorious, in most country districts, that the small tradesmen, who eagerly contend for the position of Guardian (and who form the majority of the Board) do so, not with the slightest intention of fulfilling the duties, further than the Poor Law Board can compel them to do so, but simply in order to be able to influence the granting of contracts to the benefit of their own relations or business connections. This matter underlies half the abuses of Poor Law administration as it is.

The lady (we presume Mrs. Bremner) who writes on "Women in the Labour Market," deals with some exceedingly delicate topics. We may pass over her distinction between "lady" and "woman" as almost a relic of the past; among the lower classes wholly a relic. Your laundress in London is a "lady" to her own compeers as surely as your blanchisseuse is "Madame." But we quite fail to follow Mrs. Bremner in her allusions to "temperance"—which, in so far as alcohol is concerned, she mistakes, as do most lady writers, for "intemperance abstingence".

concerned, she mistakes, as do most lady writers, for "intemperate abstinence." When, however, this same word is applied to yet more serious matters, and we are urged to "cry out for temperance with regard to the number of a man's family," it is time to ask what is meant. Surely no writer, least of all a woman can intend to suggest a resort on the part of our it is time to ask what is meant. Surely no writer, least of all a woman, can intend to suggest a resort, on the part of our poorer classes, to the infamous and revolting practices by which so many French families are limited to one son and one daughter? If not, what does she mean? We are convinced that the first command given to mankind, "Be fruitful and multiply," embraces man's duty no less than his natural wish, and that its sequel, "replenish the earth," indicates, on the highest Authority, the true remedy—diffusion, in other words, continuous emigration—for congestion of population.

The surpassing ability displayed by Mr. Gladstone in the art of "turning his back on himself" has led many people, who were formerly under the glamour of his success, to question who were formerly under the glamour of his success, to question whether his claims to have rendered great national services in the past rest altogether on a sure foundation. Mr. Gladstone has lost much indeed in the estimation of thoughtful men; and, acting on the principle that, "From him who hath not shall be taken even that which he seemeth to have," Mr. Francis Hitchman subjects the claims of the ex-Premier to consideration as a financier to a searching, and a most damag-consideration as a financier to a searching, and a most damaging, investigation.

The important questions connected with the project for Imperial Federation will long exercise the ability, and the conciliatory powers, of our foremost statesmen. One such question, and a really difficult one, has cropped up in the resolution of the Australian Colonies to put a stop to Chinese immigration; and we are glad to see indications that Lord Knutsford is fully sensible of the gravity of this matter. Regarding other matters, those connected with the possible gravitation of Canada towards the United States, his Lordship's son, Mr. Holland, contributes an article, "Mr. Goldwin Smith and Canada," indicating certain points, on which it is but right that Canadian susceptibilities should receive more attention than has hitherto been accorded to them. The career of Elizabeth, Queen of Roumania (the well-known "Carmen Sylva" of German literature) is sketched, with perhaps too strong an admixture of personal admiration, by Miss H. strong an admixture of personal admiration, by Miss H. McKerlie. We must add a word of praise to Sir A. Lyall's pretty poem, "Siva."

The Century Illustrated Monthly Magazine for June contains a very interesting article on the "Plains and Prisons of Western Siberia," which alone will repay the cost of the entire collection of the month. "What we should eat" is also replete with information, while eight or ten other pieces make up 160 pages of as good reading as is to be found in any magazine with which we are familiar.

The Art Journal for the month is chiefly noticeable for the most exquisite etching of Meyer's picture, entitled "Quiet Happiness;" of course the other pictures are good, but there is nothing unusually attractive.

Books for Review.—"Northern Afghanistan," by Major L. E. Yate, C.S.I. (W. Blackwood and Sons); "Our English Shores," by William Miller (Hamilton, Adams, and Co.); "The Greville Memoirs," Vol. VI. (Longmans and Co.).

THE expenses incurred by the Government of India for the maintenance of the numerous Afghan detenus residing in this country now amount to over five lakks yearly. This sum includes the charge of Ayub Khan and his following.

ALLEN'S INDIAN

THE DIRTY DEBATE.

THE ladies and gentlemen, parsons and professors, who believe themselves to be divinely-inspired crusaders against what they have been pleased to term "State-regulated ' had a triumph in the House of Commons on Tuesday night—had a triumph at which their organs in the Press world are loud and rejoicing at. The seeker after purity through impurity itself calls it in his journal "a crowning victory," and lifts up his voice accordingly to praise his friends and to revile his enemies. He tells his readers that Mr. Cavendish Bentinck is an "unrepentant sinner," who "will now have to mourn over his betrayal by the Government he supports, as well as over the defeat of the vicious system he loves;" and that there has been in India "a general lowering of the moral tone even to the loss of all moral sense whatever" amongst those who had to enforce certain acts of government. He is told that one of those officials, Quartermaster-General Chapman, is a man of "distinguished piety" and of "high military honour," and he mourns over the "perversion" of his "moral sense" with the greasy gushingness of an unctuous Chadband. We do not care to follow this and his fellow-moralisers into the field of indecent discussion which they seem so pleased to wander in, nor, although we desire to keep in this journal a full record of all that takes place in Parliament concerning India, have we reproduced under the usual head the details of the very dirty debate which took up so many hours' time of the House on Tuesday. We have reproduced the speeches of Sir Roper Lethbridge and Sir Richard Temple only, because they are members of the House who can speak with authoritative experience on Indian matters, and who deserve to be listened to attentively. The former, while condemning a certain odious circular, correctly said that "General Chapman was well known in India as one of the leaders in every good and religious work in that country." But he deprecated the overruling from England the authority of the Viceroy in certain matters in which he and his Council were assisted by distinguished men, and a most authoritative body of experts in the shape of the officers of the Indian Medical Service, who were distinguished not only for their skill, but for their "high feeling of honour, integrity, and devotedness to the well-being of those with whom they had to do."

Sir Richard Temple followed in a similar strain, and pointed out that to interfere with the Legislative Council of India was a very serious matter:- "The Government of India was vested with the power of initiative in making laws and regulations for India, while the power of vetowas given to the Secretary of State, who was responsible to the House of Commons and Parliament. He submitted that an authoritative suggestion, such as would be comprised in or implied by a resolution of that House, would be tantamount to an order, and would be also equivalent to taking the initiative which had been assigned by Parliament to the Government of India. He did not for a moment. suppose that a resolution of that House could be treated as a brutum fulmen, as it was really a most serious practical matter. He submitted that the proper plan was to allow the Government of India to have the initiative in this and in all other cases. They would take note of the sentiments expressed in that House, and would in due time act faithfully and loyally in accordance therewith."

This was the sensible view of the matter and was forcible in argument, notwithstanding the "crowning triumph" of the "crusaders" and the cheers which greeted it from the ladies' gallery.

India in Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—JUNE 5.

THE C. D. ACTS IN INDIA.

SPEECHES OF SIR ROPER LETHBRIDGE AND SIR RICHARD TEMPLE.

Sir R. LETHBRIDGE said that, as a member of that House who had had some connection with the work of Indian administration, he rose for the purpose of expressing the disgust and, he might say, the horror with which he read the disgraceful circular to which reference had been made so often in this debate, and also the disgust which he felt at the details in this debate, and also the disgust which he felt at the details of the so-called regimental system which had come under their review. That regimental system and that circular seemed to him to justify all that had ever been said with regard to the pernicious results of any attempt at the State regulation of vice. If Her Majesty's Government, or the Government of India, or the Indian military authorities had defended or even excused or palliated that circular and that system he for one would this evening have recorded a most emphatic vote against them. From a personal acquaintance with Sir F. Roberts, Sir C. Arbuthnot, General Chesney, and many others among the highest military authorities in India. many others among the highest military authorities in India, he would take upon himself to assure the House and the country at large that there were no men, whether in that House or elsewhere, who could feel more acutely the disgrace of these proceedings. He did not know personally General Chapman, whose responsibility for that most unfortunate circular, had been dwelt on somewhat severely from the opposite benches, but he knew him well by reputation, and he had been glad to hear the remarks which had fallen from the Under-Secretary of State for India in defence of that officer, though not in defence of that miserable circular, for which no possible excuse could be alleged. He could only suppose that General Chapman had signed it as a matter of official routine without heir aware of the courtous of the decement. without being aware of the contents of the document. General Chapman was well known in India as one of the leaders in every good and religious work in that country, and he believed that he was one of the most active and prominent members of a most estimable and self-denying religious body, the Plymouth Brethren. He was glad to find that not only the Secretary of State, but also the Government of India and all the military authorities and the Quartermaster-General's Department itself, entirely repudiated that circular, and denied that any such system as that which had been described that evening really existed in any force in India. They had pledged evening really existed in any force in India. They had pledged themselves that if it was existing anywhere it should cease to exist in the future. Since the authorities had done so much he felt very great difficulty in taking upon himself to vote for any resolution that would tend to coerce the Legislative Council of the Viceroy. There was no sign whatever to indicate that the Council had not entirely recognised their responsibility in this matter, and if the House passed such a resolution as that suggested to it by the hon member for Crewe it seemed to him that they would be taking upon themselves a most terrible responsibility, especially when it could not be denied that most members would be voting with an imporfect knowledge of the peculiar senitary conditions of an imperfect knowledge of the peculiar sanitary conditions of India and the effects of the climate in that country upon the propagation of disease, and, in fact, of all the conditions of the question which it was now proposed so summarily to decide. He would much prefer to see the ultimate decision as to the repeal of the Acts, which were at present suspended, left to the arbitrament of those distinguished men who represented public opinion, both English and Native, in the Viceroy's public opinion, both English and Native, in the Viceroy's Legislative Council. It must be remembered that the Viceroy Legislative Council. It must be remembered that the Viceroy had around him the most authoritative body of experts in all such subjects as these in that Indian Medical Service which would always be the pride of our Indian Empire, distinguished as they were, not only for their skill in dealing with all such matters as this, but also for their high feeling of honour and integrity and devotedness to the well-being of those with whom they had to do. In consideration, therefore, of the many peculiar sanitary conditions and the terrible nature of the subject before them, he would venture to urge the House to beware before it coerced the action of such men as these—(cheers). (cheers)

SIR R. TEMPLE rose to move, as an amendment, "That this House, while approving the recent action of the Government of India regarding the suspension of certain portions of the Contagious Diseases Acts in that country, yet deems it unconstitutional to interfere by resolution with that initiative in legislation which has been assigned to the Government of India by Act of Parliament." It was certainly true that, India by Act of Parliament." It was certainly true that, under the operation of the Acts in question, a certain class of diseases had not decreased as much as had been hoped for, but, nevertheless, it was impossible to doubt that the effect of that legislation had been beneficial in a physical point of view —(hear, hear). It should be remembered, in discussing this subject, that India owed the introduction of these diseases to this country, and that, therefore, we were bound to take all the precautions we could to prevent them from spreading among the Natives. Passing to the moral aspect of the question, he desired to pay a tribute of respect to the motives that actuated hon members opposite in the course which they had taken in demanding the repeal of this legislation. He must enter his protest against the unintentional exaggerations and misrepresentations into which an excess of zeal led hon members opposite, whose pictures were drawn somewhat after the Rembrandt or Salvator Rosa schools—(hear, hear, and a laugh). He this country, and that, therefore, we were bound to take all Salvator Rosa schools—(hear, hear, and a laugh). He might say at once that he was not prepared in the slightest degree to defend or to countenance anything that could be regarded as immoral, and he could assure the House that Indian officers did all they could to prevent immorality among their men while the medical officers in the discharge of their their men, while the medical officers, in the discharge of their very difficult duties, showed the most humane consideration for the miserable class of females with whom they were brought into professional contact—(hear, hear). Hon members opposite, however, should remember that there was such a thing as a choice of evils. He was afraid that the sudden repeal of these Acts would lead to a large increase in India of diseases—(hear, hear). The recent despatch of the Secretary of State addressed to the Government of India was most satisfactory, as it carried out the promises which had been made by the Under-Secretary for India. It was clearly understood that there was not to be any more compulsory examination of certain classes, and that there was to be nothing which could bear even the semblance of the authorisation of immorality or vice. He was sure that those promises were could bear even the semblance of the authorisation of immorality or vice. He was sure that those promises were to be relied upon. He acknowledged the utter indefensibility of certain despatches which had been disowned by the Government and condemned in that House. The Executive orders which had been embodied in the despatch of the Secretary of State went further than even such a measure as the repeal of these Acts. In fact, the Government had granted more than was asked for in this resolution—theory and granted more than was asked for in this resolution—(hear). While admitting, of course, that the British Parliament was the paramount authority in the Empire, he might point out that to interfere with the Legislative Council of India was a very serious matter. The Government of India was vested very serious matter. The Government of India was vested with the power of initiative in making laws and regulations for India, while the power of veto was given to the Secretary of State, who was responsible to the House of Commons and Parliament. He submitted that an authoritative suggestion, such as would be comprised in or implied by a resolution of that House, would be tantamount to an order, and would be also equivalent to taking the initiative, which had been assigned by Parliament to the Government of India. He did not for a by Parliament to the Government of India. He did not for a moment suppose that a resolution of that House could be treated as a brutum fulmen as it was really a most serious practical matter. He submitted that the proper plan was to allow the Government of India to have the initiative in this and in all other cases. They would take note of the sentiments expressed in that House, and would in due time act faithfully and loyally in accordance therewith. He hoped that the charity and humanity of hon members would not object to Lock Hospitals being maintained for those who already needed relief—(hear, hear). We ought generously to offer them relief when they sought it. We did not refuse medical aid to a man suffering from delirium tremens on the ground that he had beaught it many himself or each the ground that that he had brought it upon himself or on the ground that when he came out of the hospital he would relapse into his when he came out of the nospital he would relapse into his fault. When cured, these poor people in India would have a chance of returning to an honest life, whereas if uncured they would never emerge from a state of misery and they would die a most wretched death. In conclusion, he duly noted the argument which had been used by several speakers opposite to the effect that same remedy for this evil ought to be found. to the effect that some remedy for this evil ought to be found. He admitted that there might be physical mitigation, but there could be no real remedy even if the law were administered with the greatest stringency. He entreated hon members as civilized persons to reflect upon the many disadvantages which beset the life of the soldier in India. He was carried out to a foreign land with no family, separated from all his friends, and shut up for many months of the year from morning to evening in hot barracks which were darkened in order to exclude the rays of the burning sun. Perhaps he was allowed one or two hours' liberty in the cool of the evening. Could not hon. members imagine what were the temptations to which he was exposed in such circumstances? Despite all these temptations there had been such improvements in his lot and his surroundings, in his character, his conduct, and his habits as to encourage him (Sir R. Temple) to hope enthusiastically for the future of the soldier in India—(Hear, hear). There was only one remedy for the state of things that existed in India, and that was that the men should be enabled to take their wives and families with them to India; but the House well knew that that was practically impossible. For the limited number of families that were taken out married quarters were provided, where the women could live happily and comfortably, with all the best associations of an English home—(Hear, hear). It was said that the men should not be allowed to be idle and so get drawn into temptation. That had been considered, and soldiers' gardens and workshops had been provided, and military industry was encouraged. There his habits as to encourage him (Sir R. Temple) to hope enhad been considered, and soldiers' gardens and workshops had been provided, and military industry was encouraged. There were also facilities for education. In fact, everything was provided that was calculated to raise the lives of the men. No matter was of more Imperial importance than this, because the precious reserve of European strength must be maintained intact and unimpaired, however much the natives of India might be disposed to venerate our pure administration of the law—(hear, hear). It was on that ground that he ventured not to move but to speak to the amendment.

MR. TAYLER OF PATNA.

Sir R. LETHBRIDGE asked the Under-Secretary of State for India whether there was any record in the India Office of a letter from the late Earl of Iddesleigh (then Sir Stafford Northcote) to Mr. Commissioner Tayler, of Patna, dated December 7, 1868, in which it was stated that Mr. Tayler's appeal had not up to that date gone before the Committee of the Indian Council, and the promise was given that the case should be looked into "fairly and fully."

Sir J. Gorst: There is no record of any such letter.

INDIA STORE SUPERINTENDENT.

Mr. Pickersgill asked the Under-Secretary of State for India whether, as stated in the "Home Accounts of the Government of India" (just issued), page 59, the salary of the present Superintendent of the branch of the Store Department at the Indian Store Depôt was £900, whereas the maximum salary of that office was stated as £800.

Sir J. Gorst: The explanation is given in a foot-note to the accounts. The present Superintendent, who was appointed in 1885, was granted a personal allowance of £100 per annum from May 9, 1882.

STORES SUPPLIED TO INDIA.

In answer to Mr. Pickersgill,
Sir J. Gorst said: The committee to which the auditor refers is one on which the Treasury, the War Office, and the India Office are represented, appointed in April, 1887, to investigate the prices charged by the War Department for stores supplied to the Indian Government. The committee has not yet reported. Until the committee shall have reported it is impossible to say when the Government will pass a decision on the matter. the matter.

CAMP FOLLOWERS IN INDIA.

In answer to Mr. H. Wilson, Sir J. Gorst said: A "regimental bazaar" means the shops and trading establishments with which the military populaand trading establishments with which the limitary population of any particular regiment in a cantonment deal. All other bazaars in the cantonment, of which the chief customers are the civil population, are called "cantonment bazaars," and the chief of these would be called the "sudder bazaar."

Colonel Walter remains on as Governor-General's Agent in Rajputana until December, so that the appointment of a permanent incumbent may rest with the new Viceroy.

ONE of the curious features of the Indian wheat trade during recent years is the manner in which province after province has been laid under contribution and drained of its surplus produce to supply foreign markets. Thus the Punjab imports rose from 380,000 tons in 1884-85 to 586,000 in 1885-86, but in 1886-87 they dropped to 148,000 tons. Those of the North-West Provinces and Oudh similarly reached their maximum in 1885-86 with 292,000 tons, and then fell away to 233,000 tons. The Central Provinces, which came a year earlier under contribution, have endeavoured in vain to surpass the 350,000 tons reached in 1884-85. Bombay came to the rescue in 1886-87, and attained a maximum of 162,000 tons; while Behar made a gallant stand during the earlier part of the past season, but was unable to avert or, indeed, make any impression on the enormous decrease which the exhaustion of stocks in the great wheat-growing tracts, combined with bad seasons, produced in the total exports of the year that has just expired. It is evident from our figures that the normal exporting power of each province has yet to be gauged.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

It is pleasant, says the Pioneer, to find some of our non-commissioned officers and privates devoting their leisure hours to profitable and intellectual pursuits, especially when these bear relation to their profession. An instance of this is to be found in Sergeant-Major Reader, of the Queen's Own Sappers and Miners, Bangalore, who has just published a useful little work called The Rifleman's Pocket-book, which, though intended only for his comrades in arms, will be found of immense use to rifle-shots generally. Works on rifle-shot-ing make their expressions at the control of the control of the shot-ing make their expressions. ing make their appearance at recurring periods, but their use to the man of ordinary intellect is, as a rule, obviated by scientific phraseology and other impediments, so that any treatise worded simply and yet dealing with the subject thoroughly should be hailed with pleasure by those interested in it. Such is Sorgeant Moior Pendore both and the leasure by in it. Such is Sergeant-Major Reader's book; and to make simplicity more simple, he has interspersed throughout it fairly good diagrams illustrative of the instruction which he seeks to impart. The "Rifleman's Pocket-book" is in a handy form and has been creditably turned out at the "Sapper Press" at Bangalore; and its price, one rupee, places it within the reach of every rifle-shot in India; to Volunteers it would be invaluable. be invaluable.

On May 16th six members of the Nilghiri Volunteer Rifle Corps were presented with Burma medals by Brigadier-General Hodding, after his inspection of the battalion.

SIR LEPEL GRIFFIN ON LIBERAL UNIONISM.

At the dinner given to Mr. Jesse Collings, Lord Hartington presiding, Sir Lepel Griffin in proposing the toast of "The Chairman," said,—It is not for me, who am little of a politician, and whose life and work have lain far from the beaten highway of English politics, to discourse to you on the career of Lord Hartington as a statesman and on the brilliant and continued services which he has rendered to the great party of which he is the recognized leader. These are themes familiar in your mouths as household words. They form part of the constitutional history of the country, and neither this nor succeeding generations of Englishmen will forget them. I would wish, in the few remarks that I shall venture to address would wish, in the few remarks that I shall venture to address to you, to carry you beyond the walls of this room, beyond England itself, to those great provinces and dependencies of this ancient Empire, where Englishmen, jealous for the honour of their country, work and fight and die for the Queen, and I would tell you what is the opinion there entertained of Lord Hartington and his colleagues, Mr. Chamberlain, and Sir Henry James, and of the Liberal Unionist party. It is a wholesome thing for men who are closely engaged in political work at home to look sometimes abroad and understand how they are judged by those whose position makes them dispassionate critics, and whose estimate of character and conduct is not obscured by the too great familiarity which diminishes enthusiasm even if it does? great familiarity which diminishes enthusiasm even if it doesn not breed contempt. In the distant parts of the Empire the sound of party conflict becomes dim, the eyes are not clouded with the dust of the fight, nor in the uncertain light do mean and ignoble mercenaries take the form and style of heroes. The great deeds of great men shine out more couspicuous than here, great deeds of great men shine out more couspicuous than here, and there is no danger of our giving to Thersites the applause which is due to Agamemnon or Achilles—(cheers). I would then say that in Great Britain, wherever Englishmen of intelligence and patriotism are met together, there the name of Lord Hartington is esteemed as that of a statesman who has deserved well of his country—(cheers)—whose honour and safety he has preferred to party and power. Like Horatius, he has gallantly held the bridge against the enemies of his country, and those who have fought by his side and who are beside him to-night will share in the victory which is all but won—(cheers). The conflict which has, unfortunately, divided the great Liberal party has immensely increased the political reputation of Lord Hartington, and has given him a place in the confidence and affection of his countrymen, which otherwise he might never have gained—(cheers). men, which otherwise he might never have gained—(cheers). For his is a nature which requires storm and conflict for its development, and no party ever needed a courageous chief more than the Liberal Unionist party. It was when the sky was most gloomy, and when it seemed as though the demoralisation and disintegration of the Liberal party was complete that tion and disintegration of the Liberal party was complete, that Lord Hartington boldly stood forth, and, breaking his former tien and disintegration of the Liberal party was complete, that Lord Hartington boldly stood forth, and, breaking his former ties and leaving his ancient leader, proved that there was something nobler in English public life than the poor shifts and tricks by which discredited politicians strive to retain place and power—(cheers). There is a fine passage in Sir Philip Sidney's Arcadia, in which, describing the rising sun looming large in the morning mists, he says "The sun, like a noble heart, began to show his greatest countenance in his lowest estate." So it was with Lord Hartington, and so it is with all noble hearts who have the courage of their opinions and who are not afraid to fight for what they hold to be true—(cheers). What is the first and highest qualification of an English statesman? It is not intelligence, for we all know with what little wisdom the world is governed. It is not industry or eloquence, which is generally a snare in which are caught the feet of the unwary. It is courage. This is the first thing, and there is no second—(cheers). This is a quality which is, unfortunately, rare in English public life to-day. The old spirit of Englishmen is not dead or even asleep, and our soldiers and sailors are in no way inferior to those who have won and built up our Empire. But in politics a paralysis seemed to have seized on the body of the State. Politicians are afraid of they know not what, the Press, the mob, and are looking in all directions for a sign. It has been reserved for Lord Hartington and his colleagues and the party he leads to restore the confidence of Englishmen in the purity and honesty of political life, and to demonstrate to the world that there are roads which can be trod by politicians with honour, and of political life, and to demonstrate to the world that there are roads which can be trod by politicians with honour, and which are not slippery with the slime of greed and party spirit—(cheers). The battle is not yet over. You must not yet take breath or sheathe your swords or unbuckle your harness. And to you, who have known the joy of battle, who have shown so steady a courage, and who have so long held at bay those who would betray the country, it is a source of satisfaction that you can still fight with the leaders of your choice and with victory assured. The enemies of England on every side are watching and praying for your defeat. But they will be disappointed—(cheers). You may remember the poet crying out in his despair of a cause and a leader of political life, and to demonstrate to the world that there

"Sound, thou trumpet of God! come forth, thou great cause to array us!"

You have a cause, the noblest and the most inspiring cause—one which is deserving of your highest enthusiasm; and you have the noblest and the most disinterested of leaders, under whose banner we will gain the victory, and the toast of whose health I give you from my heart—(loud cheers).

From the preliminary forecast prepared in the Meteorological Department regarding the weather up to the end of April, it appears that the prospects of the monsoon are as follows:—First, the low pressure which obtains at present over Northern India, from Eastern Bengal to the Punjab, favours the early establishment of the Bengal current over Bengal and the Gangetic valley, to which it will probably give normal or abundant rain. Secondly, the distribution of pressure in Southern India, more especially in the Western Deccan, is such as is usually associated with delay in the establishment of the monsoon on the Bombay coast, and with diminished rainfall in Bombay and the Deccan. Thirdly, the unfavourable conditions in Southern India are associated with favourable conditions in North-West India, as was the case last year. It is, however, not probable that the monsoon rainfall in the Deccan will be largely reduced below its normal amount. The usual full forecast will be issued early next month.

THE THIBETAN IMBROGLIO.

HOWEVER regrettable in itself, the recent collision with the Thibetans at Gnatong involves at least one advantage It will help to terminate a situation which was rapidly becoming intolerable, and which could not have been pro-longed without danger to our prestige throughout the Hill region. Asiatics, especially semi-civilised Asiatics, can understand but two things: victory and defeat. The nuance of a halt in the very last position civilised men would choose to occupy, because of our disinclination to hurt the susceptibilities of China, would be far beyond the apprehension of Thibetans or Bhootanese, and might easily be misinterpreted in Nepaul. Throughout the whole Himaayan region it is now perfectly understood that we are at issue with Thibet about the closure of the trade route. across Sikkim, and that Colonel Graham was sent to clear away the obstruction. So long, therefore, as that route remains unopened, and we refrain from prosecuting the enterprise, it will be believed that we feel unable to do so. By attacking our camp at Gnatong, the Thibetans have materially helped us out of the difficulty. China cannot now complain that it is we who have taken the offensive: the Thibetan defeat will restore our prestige; and the permission which has been given Colonel Graham to pursue his assailants across the frontier should hasten the final dénovement. It will be infinitely regrettable if we are driven by circumstances to seek a military solution of the tangle into which the affair has drifted—regrettable both as regards the object we have in view, and our relations with the Suzerain · Power. Never was a project more absolutely free from aggressive intent than the Mission organised under Mr. Macaulay, eighteen months ago. We said at the time, and the admission must be repeated, that therewas much in the organisation of that Mission to alarm Lhassa, whither exaggerated reports were sure to penetrate. But what may be true of Lhassa is in no respect true of Peking; and upon the Chinese Government must rest the main responsibility for whatever inconvenience may now ensue. The Chinese, at least, were fully assured of our peaceful purpose, and had the most ample opportunity to communicate that assurance and smooth away difficulties at the Vassal Court. Eighteen months we were content to tolerate the obtrusive occupation by the Thibetans of the Jelap Pass, to enable the Chinese to procure their peaceable withdrawal. The failure to do so must impale them on one horn or other of a dilemma: it must proceed either from lack of power or lack of will. To come, as it is notorious they did come, begging at the last moment for a further respite, after eighteen months' inaction, was selfcondemnatory. It is quite probable that the case is more complicated than it appears: Chinese authority at Lhassa may not be so explicit as the Marquis Tscng would have us believe: political apprehensions had, no doubt, to be conjured, and conflicting interests to be conciliated. But a Suzerain Power which failed to accomplish these objects in the long delay accorded, must stand self-convicted of a large measure of impotence or neglect.

To which of the two causes we must attribute the delay it is not yet possible to determine. There is much agitation in the Peking dovecot; but whether it is the agitation of alarmed weakness or of tardily awakened energy, we-require more light to determine. Selengo, who was Chief. Resident at Lhassa at the time of the Macaulay failure, and who was the author of the Bhootan episode of the previous summer, was removed last year to Ili—whether on promotion or as an expression of dissatisfaction with his policy, there is nothing to indicate. But surely his successor, appointed in the middle of the crisis, should have borne with him clear instructions for its settlement. Chinese Government had been made aware, at the time of Wen Shuo's nomination, that England would not tolerate the continued closure of the trade route, and should therefore have instructed him to procure the withdrawal of the garrison. Whether those instructions failed in explicitness, or whether the Resident himself failed in power, there is nothing yet to show. Wen Shuo has been summarily recalled, but we are too familiar with the Imperial habit of disgracing agents who fail to achieve impossibilities, to attach much weight to the circumstance as an indication of the

Chang Keng has been ordered from Ili to fill the post; but this is emphatically a region of large maps, and immense distances, and imperfect communications. could not be till the end of March that Wen Shuo would hear of his disgrace, and Chang Keng of his new appoint-ment. The summer would be well advanced, therefore, before the latter could reach Lhassa; and what is to happen in the meantime? Are we to remain in the air, in every sense of the word—resting militarily on the peaks of the Himalayas, and waiting diplomatically on the uncertain support of a halting ally? or will events precipitate a more definite solution? Surely if the Imperial Government has the power and the goodwill it professes, some more direct action might be possible than the transfer to Lhassa of an official from the most remote dependency of the Empire! Our Peking correspondent suggests that the whole imbroglio may have resulted from Wen Shuo's antagonism to British influence; and that a Thibetan functionary who is said to be on his way from Lhassa to Peking may be charged to express, to the suzerain Power, the dissatisfaction of the Lamas at the interruption which this policy has brought about in trade across the Indian frontier.—That the ignorance, at Peking, of the real state of things at Lhassa may be great, we are willing to admit; but that it can be so portentous as this surmise would imply, seems beyond credence. It is inconceivable that the Resident should have carried out, at Lhassa, a policy opposed to the wishes alike of his subjects and his superiors, while the latter remained in ignorance of its bent. If guess we must, where all is uncertain, we should be inclined to suspect, rather, that the Thibetan mission means an appeal for help against an imagined military danger. For, whatever may be the feeling of the Thibetan people—and there is reason to believe they are well disposed for intercourse—a strong religious and commercial clique is clearly anxious to avert change; and it is equally certain that this clique has been so far in traditional sympathy with Peking. It may not be easy for Chinese statesmen to reverse the current of this influence; but somehow or other the end must now be accomplished. We must now push on to success; and if-through its own vacillation or through the incompetence of its agents—the Imperial Government has jeopardised its prestige, it has only itself to thank.—London and China Telegraph.

(NDO-CHINA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY (LIMITED.)

(LIMITED.)

The seventh ordinary general meeting of the Indo-China Steam Navigation Company (Limited) was held at the Cannon-street Hotel, London, on the 31st ult. Mr. J. Macandrew (chairman) presided, and he was supported by the following directors:—Mr. W. Keswick, Mr. Jas. McGregor, and Mr. Steel. There were also present, Messis. J. S. Hutton, W. C. Roberts, F. W. Kitching, W. R. Scott, W. Paterson, J. J. Keswick, C. Pook, T. D. Joss, J. D. Munro, R. Anderson, J. G. S. Anderson, C. A. North, and E. T. Agius.

Mr. A. Cheyne (secretary) having read the notice convening the meeting, which announced that the transfer books of the company would be closed from May 26 to June 15,

The Chairman said: Gentlemen, the Report has been in all your hands, and I presume we may take it as read. There is really not very much to add on this occasion to the particulars that are given therein, and I hope to detain you but a short time. The general condition of the shipping trade, which so much affects our own prosperity, has been somewhat better during the past year. It has recovered from the very low state of depression in which it was at one time, when a large proportion of the steam tonnage in the United Kingdom was laid up, and employment has been found for it; and in some woyages there is no doubt that the rates have improved—especially short voyages. But it cannot yet be described as in a state of prosperity, and upon the long voyages to the East rates are still low, both outwards and homewards—homewards more particularly. Of course, when employment for shipping is scarce, an additional amount of seeking tonnage is thrown upon the established trades, and that is a competition that we have had to meet in a form of some severity during past years. Well, that has continued up to the present time. The coasting rates on the coast of China during the past year—1887—have been decidedly low, and there has been a considerable amount of outside tonnage seeking employment, and abstracting cargoes from our lines. This competition stil —have been decidedly low, and there has been a considerable amount of outside tonnage seeking employment, and abstracting cargoes from our lines. This competition still continues, and I cannot say that it is likely to be felt less severely during the present year than during past years; but, at the same time, there has unquestionably during the present year been more cargo offering than before, and in consequence of that we have been able, since the opening of the navigation and the commencement of the season in the North, to get fuller cargoes and better rates for them, and that has been maintained up to the date of our last advices. We look, therefore, for a more hopeful state of things this year. As regards the results obtained I may say that we are doing about as well as our neighbours. We, of course, cannot compare with the subsidised lines which enjoy mail contracts, and have a revenue derived from that source independent of their ordinary earnings; but, as regards companies in much the same position as ourselves, we think we have done as well as most of them, and the result is that the directors are enabled on this occasion to propose to you the same dividend as that which was earned last year—5 per to you the same dividend as that which was earned last year—5 per cent. We should have been glad if it had been larger, but as it is we do not think it is greatly to be complained of. The fleet has been kept up in its usual state of efficiency, and, in point of fact, the repairs that have been made during 1887 have been on a somewhat larger scale than in ordinary years, and that has affected the net out-turn derivable from the voyages of the various vessels. The new vessels that we have most recently added to the fleet are doing exceedingly good work, and they are very much approved of in China. We found it advantageous in the latter part of 1887, in consequence of the demands made upon us by our China friends for more tonnage, to contract for a new vessel, the Choy Sang, which has recently been despatched to China. We are exceedingly well pleased with it, and expect will turn out a valuable addition to our fleet. We may congratulate ourselves, too, upon having during the past year We may congratulate ourselves, too, upon having during the past year experienced no loss or very serious disaster among them. The claims made upon the insurance account are simply for ordinary casualties, of which we have our fair share, but which do not amount to any very or which we have our fair share, but which do not amount to any very serious sum in the aggregate; and the consequence is we have been enabled to put our insurance account into a very materially improved position. We have now got a reserve fund that will enable us to meet any unforescen or disastrous loss that might be likely to occur in the future. One great advantage that we derive from underwriting so considerable an amount upon seamners of our own fleet is that we are enabled to get minimum on the seamners of our own fleet is that we are enabled to get minimum rates of premium on any additional amount of insurance we may require to complete our security. I may go through briefly, as usual, the items in the accounts, and will begin with the briefly, as usual, the items in the accounts, and will begin with the revenue account. As I have said, notwithstanding the concession from the general managers, the earnings of the fleet this year are less than they were last year. Last year they amounted to £53,870, and this year they are £48,903, which partly arises, as I have explained, from the diminished earnings, which we have unfortunately not been able to control, and partly also from the increased amount of repairs charged to the vessels. The interest received is larger this year. We have had less money outstanding, and we have been able to get in our accounts more promptly. The profit on coal account is also somewhat larger, but that is purely a numinal affair, which arises from the arbitrary prices at which coal is charged to various vessels, so that what is gained on one side is lost on the other. The amount transferred from the underwriting account is that which we have been obliged to transfer in order to make up the amount required to pay our 5 per cent. dividend; but at the same time it leaves the insurance our 5 per cent. dividend; but at the same time it leaves the insurance account in a satisfactory position, as you will see when we come to the balance-sheet. The general charges are much the same as last year. The exchange account shows considerable diminution as compared with last year. We have written down the entries to a fair rate of exchange for the year 1887; but I am sorry to say that the loss on that account still continues, and will again form an item in the accounts of 1888. The exchange has been continuously falling, and it is difficult to say what is the lowest point it is destined to reach. At all events, it is lower now than it was on Dec. 31, 1887. The amount set aside for depreciation has been in accordance with the regular practice since the commencement of the Company, and with the increase of the fleet is, of course, somewhat larger than last year, when it amounted to £24,281. This year the amount is £25,363, and this, of course, is the principal hole made in our earnings. In the result, however, we are able to carry forward a profit balance of £26,716 18s. 9d., and, as stated in the report, it is proposed to devote of that sum £24,794 10s. for the payment of a dividend at the rate of 5 per cent., and to carry forward the balance of £1,922 8s. 9d. to the present year. Now, if you will turn to the balance sheet, we find the share capital the same as before. The balance of underwriting account, however, has been increased from £17,000 to £30,000. That forms our reserve for unforeseen losses. The creditors in London and China are of the usual kind, and call for no particular remark. With regard to these liabilities, everything that was outstanding on Dec. 31, 1887, has now been discharged. Under the head of assets we have the valuation of the fleet, and I am happy to say that it now stands at about £14 5s. per ton, which I consider is a very satisfactory valuation, taking the average of the entire fleet. Some of the vessels which we possess are no doubt old, but our 5 per cent. dividend; but at the same time it leaves the insurance account in a satisfactory position, as you will see when we come to the happy to say that it now stands at about £14 5s. per ton, which I consider is a very satisfactory valuation, taking the average of the entire fleet. Some of the vessels which we possess are no doubt old, but they are all in a state of efficiency, and the directors hope in the course of time, and as circumstances favour them, to replace the older vessels by those of newer and more modern type. But they are all doing good work, and are well suited to the respective trades in which they are engaged. With regard to the new steamer Choy Sang, a first instalment of £6,130 11s. 10d. was paid on her being launched, and the remainder of the cost will appear in the accounts for 1888. A balance on the purchase of business to the extent of £40,000 still exists. That is an item I should very much like to deal with, and if we had been able to do so we should have written off £5,000 or £6,000 against it; but the state of the Revenue account was not sufficiently flourishing for that, consequently it has been postponed to a more favourable it; but the state of the Revenue account was not sufficiently flourishing for that, consequently it has been postponed to a more favourable occasion. The matter has not been lost sight of, and it will be dealt with on the first favourable opportunity. The coals and provisions in stock are much the same as usual. The debtors for freights and debit balances show a nominal increase, but that is partly illusory. In China against that we had on deposit and earning interest a sum of £15,800, and in London a sum of £4,000, making nearly £20,000 out on deposit, and which has been entered under the head of sundry debtors. The cash is much as usual, and calls for no remark. The loan of £20,000 which we had contracted in 1886 in part payment of vessels has been discharged, and as regards money we have been exceedingly easy during the past year in consequence of the collections in China being much more prompt than previously; and the consequence has been that our friends there held a considerable amount available for general purposes. I think these are all the remarks I have got to make to you. There is certainly nothing in our prospects to discourage us. We are going on fairly well, we have got a good business, and all the accounts received from China during the early months of this year have been decidedly hopeful, and they encourage us to believe that we shall do a better business and obtain better rates than was the case in 1887. Of course we know that the succeeding months of the year do not always carry out their early promise, and that was perticularly the case in 1887. We had reason to believe, from the reports sent us in the early part of the year, that we should have had a more favourable result to present to you than has been the case; but we do not think there is any reason to be dissatisfied or discouraged now, and we certainly entertain the hope that on the next occasion we meet you here we may be able to present you with as regards money we have been exceedingly easy during the past year in occasion we meet you here we may be able to present you with a still better account. I have now, gentlemen, to move "That the report of the directors and the accounts for 1887, as presented, be approved and passed." I shall be glad to hear any remarks or answer any questions.

Mr. Steel seconded the resolution, which was carried unanimously.

Captain Hutton proposed that the best thanks of the meeting be accorded to the chairman and board of directors, who, he said, had conducted the operations of the company to the complete satisfaction of the shareholders. Considering the difficulties which had beset shipping of late years, it was to him a matter of some surprise that they had been able to get so much out of their vessels.

Mr. C. A. North seconded the motion, which was put, and carried

The Chairman in reply said: I am much obliged to you on behalf of the board and myself for the kind manner in which Captain Hutton spoke of us, and in which you have received his remarks. I ought certainly to add as an element in your thanks the services rendered by our general managers, Messrs. Jardine, Matheson and Co. It is only by their constant and untrining attention and the great influence they possess in hydrogical business to the vessels of the company that we are enabled. bringing business to the vessels of the company that we are enabled to do as well as we have done, and to maintain the position in China which we hold. (Hear, hear.)

The proceedings then terminated.

INDIAN SPORTING NOTES.

Frazer, the jockey, has had rather a rough time of it lately. Shortly after his arrival at Rangoon, feeling great pain in his side, he consulted a doctor, who discovered he was suffering from the working about of a chip of bone which must have been splintered when he got the fall off Dispute at Ballygunge. After a painful but successful operation, the splinter was removed, and the patient is now picking up rapidly.

Frazer has a largish stable consisting of Amir and Lady Lock, the Waler Sprinter, The Ghost, and some dozen Burma and half-bred ponies, all of which Thompson is exercising. Jimmy Robinson has Minette, and Pearson has Numarka, and a few others in charge. Thompson has blossomed into an actor, and appeared on the stage the other evening in the play of Dandy Dick. The result of the Novice Stakes at the last Meerut Gymkhana is good proof of the advantage to be gained from careful pony-breeding. The performances of country-bred ponies has consistently shown the worth of the material at hand, and considering the haphazard style in which pony-breeding has been hitherto conducted, it is marvellous how the indigenous been hitherto conducted, it is marvellous how the indigenous tat has held its own against pedigreed Australian, English, Arab ponies. The success of Lady Prue, the aptly-named daughter of Modesty and Lady Blanche, should act as an incentive to all owners of pony mares to try their luck at breeding. The initial cost of a covering fee, if incurred at all, is all that need be taken into consideration, for the dam can do light work in a trap to within and a fortnight after foaling, and the expense of keeping the foal for a couple of years will not run to nearly as much as buying good-looking ponies on the chance of their turning out winners. the chance of their turning out winners.

That liberal-minded nobleman, H.H. the Maharaja of Kuch Bihar, has generously increased the value of his cup at the Calcutta Races to the handsome figure of Rs. 6,000. One of the great beauties of the Calcutta meeting is that most of the prizes are sufficiently good to enable a winning owner to pay for his crock and expenses out of the stakes themselves with-out having to run further risks in heavy betting.—Indian Planters' Gazette.

We are sorry to hear that the stewards of the Umballa and Meerut Race Meetings have been obliged to send up the names of several gentlemen to the Calcutta stewards as defaulters. As we have often pointed out, this is certainly due to the increase of pony racing, for young men with little means purchase a pony, enter it for some local races, back it more heavily than they can afford at the lottery, and then comes the end, often ruin for life or a load of debt for the rest of their sojouru in India — Asign in India.—Asian.

SIR MONIER MONIER-WILLIAMS ON MYSTIC BUDDHISM.

The annual general meeting of the Victoria (Philosophical) Institute, which now numbers nearly 1,300 home, foreign, and colonial members, and has for its object the impartial investicolonial members, and has for its object the impartial investigation of important questions connected with philosophy and science, was held this week, at the house of the Society of Arts. The President, Professor G. G. Stokes, P.R.S., M.P., took the chair. The twenty-second annual report was read by Captain Frank Petrie, the honorary Secretary, and referred to the continued progress of the Society, and to the constantly increasing number of prominent men in that great body of scientists, of whom every Englishman was so justly proud, who were joining the Institute and taking part in its work. Much of that work tended to aid science, and much, of a special character, tended to show the error those who sought to attack religion in the name of science. Sir Monier-Williams then delivered the address on Mystical Buddhism; he commenced by showing that, to the science. Sir Monier-Williams then delivered the address on Mystical Buddhism; he commenced by showing that, to the Buddhist, Bodhi or true knowledge was knowledge acquired through the intellectual faculties, explaining that originally Buddhism abstained from mysticism, which was developed through the connection of Buddhism with the "yoga" system, or the so-called "union" of man's spirit with the spirit of the universe. Sir Monier then explained all the various methods of festing self-torture processed by the Buddhists. the universe. Sir Monier then explained all the various methods of fasting self-torture practised by the Buddhists with a view to bringing their bodies into subjection to their spirit, and to the trancelike states induced, and pointed out that the so-called Spiritualism, Neo-Buddhism, and theosophy, animal magnetism, clairvoyance, thought-reading, &c., of the present day had their counterparts over 2,000 years ago in India, but it was to be doubted whether they would bear the counterparts in the formula production. searching light of European scientific examination.

A vote of thanks was accorded to Sir Monier-Williams, and it was pointed out that much of the sentiment found in modern books published in praise of Neo-Buddhism was borrowed from Christianity; that Buddhism itself had failed in practice, and had proved itself unsuited to reasonable man; it was essentually the bare, hollow emptiness described by Sirit was essentially the bare, hollow emptiness described by Sirit Monier will be a sentiment of the sentiment found in modern books. After a vote of thanks to the President, the meeting adjourned to the museum, where refreshments were served.

A WARNING TO SHIPPERS TO TURKISH PORTS.—A letter received lately from the Consul at Jeddah gives examples of the disagreeable consequences which may ensue upon landing cargo at Turkish custom-houses when any errors or omissions exist in the ship's manifest. If anything entered in the manifest is found deficient in the cargo, duty is charged on it just as though it was landed; and if any goods are found on board which are omitted from the manifest, double duty is charged on them. Shippers in India cannot be too careful in seeing that manifests of cargo for Turkish ports are accurate, as no evidence from bills of lading or such documents appear to be accepted in proof of good faith.

SIRDAR AYUB KHAN.—Ayub Khan arrived at Rawalpindi on Sunday last, May 13, and was received by the Deputy Commissioner, the Brigade-Major, and some fifty Afghan Sirdars who did homage to him. Many Raises were also present, with a large crowd of Natives and a sprinkling of Europeans. He was to have dined at the Club on Sunday, and will be treated in the station as an honoured guest. A Bombay paper has got hold of an incident in connection with Ayub Khan's voyage in the Lawrence to Karachi:—"One evening, as the Sirdar was sitting on the main deck enjoying the fresh breeze, a Chinese carpenter belonging to the ship's company approached him, and begged of his Highness to accept a cup and saucer as tribute from a poor man. His Highness was pleased to accept this offer, and in return offered him a sum of twenty rupees. This the Chinaman would not take. Thereupon the Sirdar took off a gold ring which he wore on his finger and offered it. The Chinaman accepted it."

'Were I the Russian Admiral I would make you fork out some of your crores, or I would light up your mills for you!' he said with a hearty chuckle. There is no harm in saying this now, for since then the very gardens of Government House have been planted with guns, and the Mahaluxmee Battery has been developed to formidable proportions. Before this present writing can meet Colonel Timler's eye sundry torpedo boats will be lying at anchor in the great bay; Admiral Freemantle will have a more formidable flag-ship and the reorganisation of the East India Squadron will bring about that measure of reasonable security which Sir William Hewett desired, and laboured not unsuc-Squadron will bring about that measure of reasonable security which Sir William Hewett desired, and laboured not unsuccessfully to accelerate. Those who know him best are not quite sure that he did not of set purpose allow Admiral Fremantle to seize Falmouth, and hold that harbour for ten hours during the Channel Campaign of last year, in order that public opinion might be brought to understand how necessary it is to provide adequately against unforseen dangers in time of war. He was not a man to give the slightest heed to his own credit as an adept in naval manœuvres, if he believed that by letting the invading Admiral score he could impress upon the country the danger of being taken unawares on the outbreak of a war—a danger which no naval officer worth his salt ever of a war-a danger which no naval officer worth his salt ever ignores.

The East India Association.—The annual meeting of the East India Association, an organisation of Anglo-Indians and Native gentlemen, established in London and Bombay "for the disinterested and independent advocacy and welfare of the inhabitants of India generally," was held on Thursday, May 31, in the rooms of the Society, Charing-cross, Sir Richard Temple, M.P., G.C.S.I., presiding. The report of the Council for the past year showed that the objects of the Association have been carried on steadily, with a view to increasing its usefulness and influence, unswayed by political parties in this country or by class-feeling in India. BROAD ARROW

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Milltary Gazette" freely opens its corre-pondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

ments."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonics. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the Fren3h, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

MAGAZINE THAT GIVES EXPRESSION

TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PROPER OF

INDIA.

There are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to Indis, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing moximury (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian toeple.

ing between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian beople.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordicgly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clube, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

THE CALCUTTA REVIEW.

(The only Quarterly Review in India.)

ESTABLISHED 1844.

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it there is no tear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—£tatesman, October 1886.

or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name —J. W. KAYE, Athenseum Club, June 28, 1872.

The Calcutta R view has given us valuable articles on the army. Sen e from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophesy, of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.— Address of the C.-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

Address of the C-in-o. at the collection of the calcutta Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westmineter

J. B. DENT, Manager.

Wanted agents, at home and abroad, to obtain orders for watches and jewellery on our new instalment system, by weekly or monthly payments. Most beneficial to subscribers and agents, as money paid for rent of showy shops and shopmen are thus saved to members joining our instalment system. Also trustworthy men wanted in every ship, regiment, and battery to act as agent, to enable naval and military men to secure good, reliable watches at a small profit above the actual cost.

Naval and military agents when leaving the service, desirous of being appointed district agents or travellers, are invited to apply for the post. Means of earning a good income were never before placed so easily in the reach of intelligent, energetic naval or military men leaving the service. Terms on application.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

FRIDAY, JUNE 15, 1888.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 29th May; from Allahabad and Madras to the 27th May; and from Calcutta to the 26th May.

AFTER the Levée held at the Viceregal Lodge, Simla, May 22, Sir Frederick Roberts was invested with the insignia of a Knight Grand Commander of the Order of the Indian Empire by his Excellency the Viceroy as Grand Master. The ceremony was a very short and

THE Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal reached Pedong at six P.M. on Saturday, May 19, having accomplished a troublesome journey of fifty miles from Silligoree. He went on again on Sunday to Pedamchen, where he was met by Mr. Paul, and reached Gnatong on Monday after the large was a property during the action with the noon. His Honour was present during the action with the Tibetans on Tuesday, May 22nd.

On that day, at an early hour, a large force of Tibetans, numbering between 2,500 and 3,000 men, attacked our camp at Gnatong. After about three hours' fighting they were repulsed, between 100 and 150 of them being killed and a number wounded. Our loss was three killed, including a sergeant of the Derbyshire Regiment, and six wounded—three severely. An advance will now in all probability be made by our forces across the Tibetan frontier.

THE telegraph line is to be extended at once as far as Gnatong; and the Commissary-General will forward at once to Colonel Graham's camp supplies for the whole of the Sikkim Field Force sufficient to last to the end of June, and for the 32nd Pioneers and 250 mules for a period of four months from 1st July.

Mr. D. M. BARBOUR will return to India in November, when the Hon. Mr. Westland, whom he will relieve, will

Mr. Donald Smeaton is to be confirmed as Commissioner of the Central Division in Upper Burma in the place of Mr. Fryer, who has been appointed to the new post of Financial Commissioner, but will continue to act as Chief Secretary to Government during Mr. Symes's absence.

THE members of the Army Mobilisation Committee have still some months' work before them. They met again at Simla on May 23rd last to re-embark upon their

THE Government of India have addressed the Secretary of State again, urging the repeal of the import duty upon Indian silver goods. It is hoped that now that great free trader, Mr. Gladstone, who was the prime obstacle to reform, is out of the way, there is a chance of justice for India.

THE Government of India's despatch to the Secretary of State on the question of the transfer of Sind from Bombay to the Punjab is being delayed for the submission of the opinion of the Bombay Government on the subject.

A NOTE by Sir Theodore Hope on the subject of the Public Works Department establishment will be published along with the Financial Committee's Report.

MR. LESLIE SAUNDERS, Commissioner of the Berars, was killed by a fall from his horse at Chikalda, in the Ellichpur district, on Tuesday, May 22nd. Mr. Saunders was the son of Mr. Charles Saunders, C.B., formerly Resident at Hyderabad, and entered the Civil Service in 1858. He served for a number of years in the Punjab, \ from whence he succeeded to the Commissionership of Ajmir and finally to that of the Berars.

COLONEL LEACOCK, commanding Camp Baroda, was accidentally drowned on the afternoon of May 23.

SURGEON GENGE, of Mooltan, and six of his servants have been buried in an avalanche in the Kaintal Nulla, in Kishtwar, Kashmir.

FURTHER news from Herat fully confirms the first report that some Salor Turkomans crossed into Afghan territory, and removed some of their tribesmen, which resulted in the Afghan troops going in pursuit. There was an en-counter between the parties, but no Russians were actually with the Salors at the time. The border is now quiet.

THE Shinwaris of Pesh Bolak, beyond the Khyber, are again resisting the Amir Abdur Rahman's authority, having declined to submit to the measurement of their lands by Afghan officials. Gholam Haider, the Amir's General at Jellalabad, is taking the usual coercive measures.

SAMADA KHAN, the Amir's late agent at Bombay, has died at Jellalabad on his return journey to Kabul. He had been recalled, and popular rumour asserts that he poisoned himself in dread of the Amir's displeasure.

THE allowances to Sirdars Ayub and Hashim Khan are to be kept within a total of four lakhs per annum. Ayub's personal income has been fixed at Rs. 5,000 a month, and he will have to furnish a list showing what allotment he makes to each of his retainers.

THE latest news from Kashmir says that cholera in a more virulent form is raging in Srinagar, and the daily number of seizures and deaths increasing. There have also been serious outbreaks of cholera at Poona, Ahmedabad and other places.

ABDUL Huq made an offer to the Hyderabad Government that he would take back the 12,500 shares in the Mining Company bought by him in London for the Nizam, and would repay the purchase money, amounting to £151,631. To this proposal, however, was attached the condition that he should be protected from all further proceedings. The terms were promptly rejected. The Sirdar now appears to have withdrawn the qualification attached to his original offer, and is to make restitution of the money without regard to any future action against him. He is to pay seven lakhs in cash, hand over a debt of four lakhs, and mortgage all his Bombay property for the balance of the amount. He will then be in possession of the scrip, the value of which will of course depend entirely on the result of the Parliamentary investigation in London.

THE Government of India have confirmed the action of the Madras Government fixing a fee of Rs. 1,000 a year for the Minor Professorship of Medical Jurisprudence.

An important question has arisen at Bangalore respecting the jurisdiction of Native Courts over European British-born subjects, out of a case recently tried by the District Magistrate of Tumkur. Messrs. Fuller and Barclay, European British-born subjects, employed on the Southern Mahratta Railway, waived their rights to be tried as such on charges of assault on Natives. Mr. Fuller was fined Rs. 5 and Mr. Barclay was acquitted. The Mysore Chief Court, reviewing the case, entertained doubts as to the legality of the trial, Tumkur being foreign territory—that is, in a Native State. The point was referred to the Dewan, who referred it to the British Resident, and the question was then submitted for the opinion of the Government of India, who have intimated that they entertain no doubt that the Magistrate of Tumkur had no jurisdiction to try such cases, and that the trial was illegal. Accordingly the Mysore Chief Court issued notices on the parties concerned to show cause why the proceedings of the Tumkur District Magistrate should not be quashed, and a fresh trial ordered before a competent tribunal. The case has been posted for May 25. An important question has arisen at Bangalore respecting May 25.

NOTES.

As we go to press the sad news, not unexpected, comes that the Emperor of Germany is no more. For months past not only Germany, but Europe, not only Europe, but the whole civilised world, have been anxiously watching by the bedside of the Monarch who, in his long agony of suffering, has set such a noble example of calmness, fortitude, and resignation in the very presence of the shadow of death. All have been waiting with sickened hearts, hoping against hope, yet fearing that the worst would come; and now all that was feared has happened. There cannot be an English man or English woman who, hearing the sad tidings to-day, will not claim to share in the grief which is finding utterance in the Fatherland around that Royal death-bed.

THE news has been flashed by wire to India already, and not only our own countrymen there, but all our enfightened Native subjects will regret the untimely death of the great and good Kaiser, whose rule promised to be one not only beneficent to Germany, but a guarantee of peace to Europe.

It is not the moment now to discount the future. speculation must be put aside in the presence of the great calamity which has fallen upon the nations, but of this one may be sure, that the news of the Emperor's death will be received in India not only with much sorrow, but with grave anxieties as to what may follow in the course of events. The clouds of war may gather slowly or rapidly, but the general feeling will be that the best guarantee which existed for the peace of Europe has now been lost to us, and the flames of discord—which will embrace the East, too -- may break out now at any moment.

FORTUNATELY, India cannot be taken by surprise if the calamity of war comes near her borders. She has been watching and keeping guard, but the situation is one of anxiety, although not necessarily one of fear. It is to be hoped, therefore, that there will be no panic-mongering, no wild cry for immediate and extravagant expenditure on frontier or other defensive measures, but rather let us hope that the authorities in India will follow old Noll's advice, to trust in Providence and keep their powder dry. And also their heads cool.

THE papers to hand by the present Overland Mail bring · little news of importance to comment upon. The Hyderabad (Deccam) scandal continues to be widely discussed, and the tone of the remarks generally is not complimentary of the honesty of Abdul Huq, or the wisdom of Mr. Cordery, who, it is said, might have prevented all the scandal had he but exercised some discretion and judgment, especially as he could hardly be ignorant of Abdul Huq's character and antecedents. But Mr. Cordery has now been examined before the London Commission, and until their report is published comment on our part would be not only in bad taste, but unfair.

THE fact that Abdul Huq has made restoration of the gains which he is supposed to have made by the sale of his shares to the Nizam, ought to assist the Royal Commission in forming their opinion as to the whole transaction. The astute Native is still a very rich man, if the reports in the Bombay papers be true. One of these papers states that he has property in that city to the amount of two lacs of rupees, but it hints at something very like a local "scandal" as to the way he obtained it:—"The Sirdar's first purchase was the Government Central Press in the heart of the Fort, a building which, as former Government House and subsequently as the Secretariat, possesses much historical interest. By many the sale of this building was considered as a piece of vandalism; but what was considered to be most objectionable was the fact that this building, which occupies one of the best sites in the Fort, was sold by private treaty by the Collector. No one knew that the old Secretariat was in the market until the purchase has been made by Abdul Huq." If this be so, it would seem that London brokers and "promoters" have not all the "crooked wisdom" of the world to themselves.

It is pleasant to turn away from the story of corruption and confusion which comes from the Hyderabad State to a story of progress and enlightment which comes from another Indian State—that of Gwalior, where several public works are now being carried out. A hospital is being built at a cost of $5\frac{1}{2}$ lakhs, from designs prepared by Mr. Harris, the State Engineer. This will be an imposing structure. A college, which is to cost about $3\frac{1}{2}$ lakhs of the superintendence of rupees, is also being built, under the superintendence of Mr. Brandreth, son of the Principal of Roorkee College. A two-storyed dak bungalow is being erected. A Native rest-house, to cost Rs. 30,000, is also in progress. But this does not exhaust the catalogue. A park to extend the whole length of the Fort is to be formed, and to be endowed with a lakh a year. All these works are being carried out by Mr. Harris, the State Engineer, who is allowed Rs. 20,00,000 annually for the maintenance of the Public Works Department.

It is to be hoped that we are not going to have another "little frontier war," but it is not impossible if the Times of India be correct in the following:—"It will doubtless interest the Government of India to be informed that in the opinion of those best acquainted with the present state of affairs on the Chittagong frontier, the abandonment of an expedition next autumn is not likely to effect any pecuniary saving. The state of affairs there is just now such that very considerable precautions have to be taken for the protection of the border. These measures, if the tribes learn they are to be left unpunished, and are thus, as is likely to be the case, emboldened to further aggression, will require to be conducted on a still wider scale, so that their cost will probably be quite as great as that of an expedition."

The total amount of the Bengal military budget is estimated for 1888-89 at Rs. 8,28,48,660, against Rs. 7,94,11,350 in the previous year, the increase being Rs. 34,37,310. This excludes the cost of European stores, payable in England. The grand total of all arms is 130,360 men and 6,905 horses, against 129,987 men and 6,937 horses last year. In addition 14,712 horses are maintained by the Native cavalry regiments. Of this force 3,165 are British officers, 1,607 are Native officers, 3,139 are British non-commissioned officers, 40,945 are British privates, and 81,504 are Natives. The European artillery force, rank and file, numbers 6,399 and the Native one 3,026. The European infantry amounts to 31,280, and the Native to 61,041. The engineers and sappers number 1,344. The staff corps, officers not employed in military service, and general officers (20) make a total of 495. officers (20) make a total of 495.

Captain Raikes has sent an ultimatum to the chiefs of the Tashow tribe of Chins requiring them to give up within one month the following persons:—The Shwaygyobin Prince and his followers, the ex-Tsawbwa of Kale, and the leaders of the Chins who recently raided upon villages in British territory. He announced that if this demand were not complied with a punitive expedition would be sent into the Tashow country with a property of the principle of the principle. with orders to punish the tribes with the utmost severity. SIKKIM AND TIBET.

CALCUTTA, JUNE 10.

Our endeavours to establish peaceful relations with Tibet are apparently fruitless, and the Tibetans still maintain an attitude of sullen hostility. The political situation is rendered somewhat embarrassing by the difficulty of retaining the European troops in their present position during the forthcoming, rainy season. Were the European troops now withdrawn, in accordance with the arrangements in contemplation prior to the recent attack, our action would afford encouragement to the Tibetan authorities, who would make a vigorous attempt to recent attack, our action would afford encouragement to the Tibetan authorities, who would make a vigorous attempt to reoccupy Sikkim. On the other hand, an advance into Tibet with so small an expeditionary force, compelled to operate in a hostile and mountainous country far removed from its base, and carrying with it all the necessary supplies, would simply invite disaster. All that can be done at present is to render our Gnatong encampment impregnable, to garrison it with native troops inured to the severities of the climate and accustomed to mountainous districts, and then patiently to await the result of the exercise of Chinese authority. If this should fail, preparations of a more serious character will have to be made later for a march on Lhassa, in order to bring the Tibetan Government to reason, and so dictate a permanent peace from the Tibetan capital.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

THE NEW HINDOOISM.

(Times of India.) The remarkable speech made by the Dewan Raghunath Rao to the mutinous students of the Madras Christian College is worthy of grave consideration. It will be interesting to see how far his countrymen will respond to his appeal. The Dewan is a product of our higher education which has enabled him to see the unmeaning and mischievous practices which was gathered around Hindooism. But will the orthodox Hindoos who support his scheme allow the excrescences to be removed? Who are to be the teachers of this new Hindooism, and how who support his scheme allow the excrescences to be removed as Who are to be the teachers of this new Hindooism, and how are they to combine the teaching of it with the modern advancement in science and letters? The reformation of the Hindoo religious system will be a work of many years. The Brahmans having established for themselves a Hindoo Theological College, the Christian Missionaries will be able to devote themselves to the education and elevation of the low castes. They can preach to the poor and despise the same castes. They can preach to the poor and despise the same glad tidings which their predecessors preached to the outcasts and slaves. They can give to the Mahrs and Dheds the instruction which will raise them in the scale of life, and they can furnish them with those virtues which have made Chris tianity a vital force for many centuries. Christianity will leaven the mass, and must do more to improve social institu-tions than a system of education founded on caste prejudices. However, if Christianity is to influence the people of India, However, if Christianity is to influence the people of India, the Christian teacher must not pursue the course which the Rev. Mr. Laidlaw is said to have followed in the Madras College. The Christian teacher should not ransack the sacred books of the Hindoos in order to find matter for uncharitable censure and carping criticism, but he should make it his duty to gain the same knowledge of the Hindoo mind as St. Paul had of the Hebrew mind. He must accept the social order of the land and mould it into Christian form, as the Apostles did that of the Roman Empire. The extraordinary reassertion of Hindooism which has shown itself in Madras, and which is daily gaining strength in Bombay, is mainly due to the somewhat wild and indiscreet attacks which have of late been made on Hindoo institutions and customs. The late been made on Hindoo institutions and customs. The spread of knowledge must in course of time destroy what is evil in them, but mere hostile criticism is apt to make the Natives cling to them from the combined motive of pride and patriotism. The Natives of the old school see that the old beliefs are being shattered and the moral and domestic associations connected with them broken. It is impossible not to tions connected with them broken. It is impossible not to feel sympathy for their desire to restore the old habit of reverence, and to check the dissoluteness caused by the abandonment of old creeds and the adoption of new customs. The broken idol can never be repaired. But by making our teaching more thorough, by bringing the young more in contact with the teacher, much may be done to create a higher and better morality. (Deccan Times.)

We have already, for instance, stated that the Mining Concession was not signed until some time after his Highness's installation, a period when, it was well known, the gravest differences subsisted between his Highness and his Minister. In this divided state of the counsels of the Government to Residency influence was, of course, paramount, and it is difficult to see how the Government of India can escape responsibility in this matter when it is admitted that Mr. Cordery's assistant checked the Deed, clause by clause, and that it was in the same officer's presence and on his assurance that Sir Salar Jung signed the document. But here it becomes very material to ask, Did Sir Salar Jung in a matter of such exceeding importance take his Master's pleasure before signing this document? Considering the nature of the relations which then existed between him and the Sovereign, he could We have already, for instance, stated that the Mining Conwhich then existed between him and the Sovereign, he could have had little assurance that he had it virtually by reason of any perfect familiarity with his wishes and intentions. Even if he considered the act covered by the powers of the Dewanship, one would suppose that ordinary prudence and caution, if not courtesy, would have recognised the value with which the Sovereign's sanction would have invested the whole proceedings. Moreover, it must not be forgotten that there was at the time a Council of State in existence, and if any question, then surely this, involving a million sterling of money, was a question fit to be debated therein. When the members of the Council heard that the agreement had been completed without any consultation with them on the matter, some of them rewhich then existed between him and the Sovereign, he could any consultation with them on the matter, some of them resented the slight. Had the papers indeed been presented to the Council, the parties interested full well knew that they would have been thrown out, as terms much more favourable had in the meantime been offered. But as a matter of fact the question was not settled before his Highness's installation. Long after this event, mining rights over a portion of his Highness's dominions were actually granted to certain other parties, and orders were issued in due course thereof through the Revenue Board, which was then in existence, intimating that such a concession was infact made. When, however, the Residency heard of the matter, the affair was reported to the Government of India, and several communications passed between the Resident and the ex-Minister on the subject. It was, we believed, strongly rumoured at the time that a Russian syndicate had agreed to find the working capital, and this was popularly assigned as the reason for the explanation which the ex-Minister was called upon to make upon the subject. The contract was thereupon cancelled and annulled too, it is believed, at the instance of the Resident. Surely, all this was a further reason if one were at all necessary for laying the Deed brought up by Mr. Winter before the Council of State for debate and approval before final signature. For this omission, the Residency is wholly responsible, and it is, as we have said before, very difficult to see how the Government of India can now evade responsibility in the matter.

THE SUPREME COUNCIL. (Madras Mail.)

The Pioneer institutes a somewhat invidious comparison between the record of the services of Sir Charles Aitchison, B.S.C., the retiring member of the Viceregal Council, and that of Mr. Philip Hutchins, M.C.S., who is popularly designated as his successor. "Among the many men whom might be named as Sir Charles Aitchison's possible successor it is difficult to think of anyone whose qualifications for the place at all resemble his. A very likely name, for instance, is that of Mr. Hutchins, a member now of the Madras Council, and previously of the Madras High Court. Mr. Hutchins has the reputation of being a particularly capable man. But one has only to go through the official 'History of Services' of the two to realise the difference of weight which their voices would carry in the counsels of the Government." The Pioneer would not care to affirm that the latest Madras member of the Council, Sir Alexander Arbuthnot, was a man whose voice carried little weight by reason of his official experience having been restricted to Madras. Sir Alexander Arbuthnot—a Rugbean—had filled with remarkable ability the position of Director of Public Instruction for seven years; had been five years Chief Secretary; had been five years Member of the Council of Madras; and had for a few months been Provisional Governor. He had spent nearly thirty-two years in the country when he was tary; had been five years Member of the Council of Madras; and had for a few months been Provisional Governor. He had spent nearly thirty-two years in the country when he was summoned to the Supreme Council, and he assumed his new office when in the possession of robust health, as well as of wide departmental experience. He was, to some extent, eclipsed by his colleague, Sir John Strachey, the Finance Minister, who was Lord Lytton's alter ego; but otherwise he held his own against all comers, and he offered some effectual resistance to theories of administration which were disapproved by the country at large. Mr. Hutchins's record compares nery favourably with Sir Alexander Arbuthnot's. A barrister, learned in the law, who has passed the high proficiency tests in Tamil and Telugu, he has been a Sub-Collector, Deputy Secretary to Government in the Revenue Department, Judge of a Small Cause Court, Private Secretary to a Provisional Governor, Registrar of the High Court, Civil and Sessions Judge in five districts, Revenue Secretary to the Government, Judge of the High Court, and he is now a member of the Council. The Pioneer claims for Sir Charles Aitchison that "he has brought to bear upon the counsels of the Government a judgment clear and strong, and eminently candid, which is fortified moreover by a singularly wide knowledge of affairs." The same may be confidently said of Mr. Hutchins's services to the Government of which he is now a member. A man who has been Foreign Secretary to the Government of India for eight may be confidently said of Mr. Hutchins's services to the Government of which he is now a member. A man who has been Foreign Secretary to the Government of India for eight of the best years of his life, who has been Commissioner of British Burma for three years, Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab for five years, and member of the Supreme Council for one year, must have had opportunities for acquiring an experience of India that are denied to the Madras officer who has stuck to his own Presidency. On the other hand, it can has stuck to his own Presidency. On the other hand, it can hardly be supposed that Sir Charles Aitchison's knowledge of the thirty-one millions of Her Majesty's subjects in Southern India, of their land tenures, their characteristics, their wants, can be comparable with what Mr. Hutchins has accumulated. If mere variety of service were to guide selections for the Viceregal Council, then none but Bengal men should ever be appointed, for Bengal enjoys a preferential right to the best things of the land; but Bengal, large as the Presidency is, is not India, and a Supreme Council formed exclusively of bright particular stars of the Bengal Civil Service would habitually take those Bengal view of things which Madras knows to her cost are not invariably expedient. The Bengal mind tempered by Madras sagacity is more likely to avoid pitfalls than that mind is when devoid of the safeguard.

The Supreme Council is not wisely constituted, for the Madras and Bombay Presidencies should not, as at present, provide a member alternately, or by turns, but should always be represented in it. The Finance Minister has been an outsider when not a member of the Bengal Civil Service, but so great a difficulty has been experienced of late years in enlisting a man of mark in England for the appointment that the Ministership has come to be regarded almost as a perquisite of that service. At present Mr. Westland, B.C.S., the Acting Finance Minister, has two Bengalees, Sir Charles Aitchison and Sir Charles Elliott, as his Civil colleagues, and Madras and Bombay are both unrepresented. A sixth member is allowed by the Indian Councils Act, but economical considerations have induced the Secretary of State to leave the sixth seat vacant, and to let the three Civil, the Military, and the Legal Members divide the work among them as best they can. The weight of that work increases every year, and no one who has been admitted ever so little behind the scenes at Calcutta will marvel at the practical admission of Sir Charles Aitchison that it is too crushing for even his well-drilled shoulders to bear. With impaired physical and mental powers he is warned that he cannot rely on such storage of force as he still commands to carry him on much longer; so, like a wise man, he accepts the situation, and resigns his prospective income of "six sixes" a month for four years yet to come. If the salary of Rs. 6,666-6-6 from each of the five salaries would contribute Rs. 3,332 towards the salary of a sixth man. Then, with a Council always composed of six members, and three Civil members, representative of Bengal, Madras, and Bombay respectively. Overwork is driving Lord Dufferin, as well as Sir Charles Aitchison, prematurely from office; and though those who remain make no public complaint, it may be concluded that they are sometimes tempted by the magnitude of the contents of the red boxes that are placed every morning on their tables

BENGAL.

Indigo prospects throughout Lower Bengal are, generally speaking, satisfactory. In the Midnapur district, however, there has been no rain, and the sowings have not been completed. In fact, more rain would be generally beneficial. In Bhaugulpur good rain has fallen, and the prospects have improved, while in Purneah the crop is well advanced. Some showers have fallen in North Champarun and parts of Tirhut, but generally throughout Behar more rain is required.

TELEGRAMS from the tea districts up to the 17th inst. show that the weather had improved in Cachar and Sylhet, but that the season was still backward owing to the excessive damage done by the late hailstorms. In the rest of Assam, the weather, which has not improved, is too cold for manufacture in some parts, while there is too much rain in others. Good rain has fallen in Chittagong, and showers in most parts of the Terai, Kurseong, and the Dooars, where plucking has been begun again. In Ranchi and Hazaribagh the weather is very hot and dry.

It is probable that very few persons in India, outside of the Calcutta Chamber of Commerce, are aware of the origin and actual scope of the approaching Glasgow International Exhibition, says a Calcutta journal. It has been a long cherished idea in the minds of members of the Glasgow and Calcutta Chambers, that an effort should be made to divert some of the enormous trade between the City of Palaces and London and Liverpool to the good city of Glasgow, whose docks and warehouses are not half occupied by shipping and goods, and where, it is contended, work can be conducted on a far more economical scale than in either of the English ports. It is desired to form and extend a direct trade between Glasgow and Calcutta, as well as with other eastern and colonial ports as opportunities offer, and it was felt that the initiation of an Exhibition on a large scale might forward this object. This being the idea, special prominence will be given to the Indian, Canadian and Ceylon sections of the Exhibition.

MADRAS.

THE coffee crop of Coorg is reported to be seriously affected, owing to want of rain. Considerable anxiety is consequently felt among the planters.

News has reached Pondicherry that the contract for the construction of the Pamben Channel Works has been arranged between the London directors and a French firm of contractors upon the revised plans and altered estimates of M. Poilay, civil engineer, who was sent from Paris to India about a year ago to explore and report on the land and country through which the canal is to pass. Active operations on the canal will probably not begin until after the close of the north-east monsoon. Preliminary works, however, will most likely be commenced much earlier. It is calculated it will take four years to complete the canal.

APPOINTMENTS in the Revenue Survey, which are now held by Uncovenanted Officers, are, a Madras paper understands, to continue to be treated as appointments open to Commissioned Military Officers.

BOMBAY.

The arrangements in the Small Cause Court necessitated by the death of Mr. N. Spencer have been determined on. Mr. Warden, the Third Judge, who has just returned from leave, after an extension of service, becomes Second Judge, Mr. Gunputrao Basker, the Fourth Judge, succeeding him. Mr. Cursetjee Manockjee Cursetjee, barrister-at-law, who quite recently reverted to his substantive appointment at Ahmedabad, after acting as Fourth Judge in Bombay for a year and four months, has been appointed to the Fourth Judgeship. Mr. Cursetjee, who is the eldest son of the late Mr. Manockjee Cursetjee, has for thirteen years been Small Causes Court Judge at Ahmednagar and Ahmedabad, and his appointment to the vacant judgeship is an endorsement by the Government of the good opinion which was formed of him by the public during his tenure of the acting appointment.

THE Bombay Government are preparing to legislate on certain points relating to the regulation of the police. A Bill dealing with the Mofussil Police is now in hand, and will probably come before the Legislative Council at Poona. The Bombay City Police will be dealt with in a separate Bill, but this cannot come before the Council until next year.

A TENDER for some lakhs of the new issue for the Tansa 5 per cent. loan has been made at $105\frac{1}{2}$. When this loan was first issued a couple of years ago the highest tenders did not exceed 95; so that it is obvious that the Municipal credit is going up by leaps and bounds.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—JUNE 8.

DEBATE ON THE GRIEVANCES OF THE UNCOVENANTED SERVICES.

Mr. King rose to call attention to the grievances of the uncovenanted European servants of the Government of India, particularly as regards leave, retiring rules, and the payment of pensions; and to move,—"That, in the opinion of this House, it is inequitable and anomalous that privileges as re-House, it is inequitable and anomalous that privileges as regards leave and retirement should be refused to some classes of officers in the uncovenanted Civil Service of India which are enjoyed by others in similar circumstances; and that, in view of the heavy fall in the value of the rupee, the payment of pensions of retired European uncovenanted officers in England at the official rate of exchange is no longer equitable. He pointed out that this subject was new to the House, and, not unnaturally, somewhat unattractive to its members. Memorial after memorial and petition after petition had been sent into the India Office regarding it, but no attention had been paid to their prayer, nor had even a Select Committee been appointed to consider the grievances complained of. It was on these grounds that he now ventured to appeal to the was on these grounds that he now ventured to appeal to the House. This was the cry of a whole service and not the mere "fad" of an individual. He spoke now as the spokesman of the whole service, from the highest to the lowest. Twenty-eight meetings had been held in India regarding these grievances since October, 1886. At Lahore, Calcutta, Delhi, Lucknow, and Darjeeling, the voice of the uncovenanted servants had been raised against the grievances under which they suffered. He had received telegram after talegram from they suffered. He had received telegram after telegram from they suffered. He had received telegram after telegram from all the leading places in India, entreating the House of Commons to extend its sympathy and support to those servants. He thought, therefore, that discontent when it took such a form as this must command the attention of any Government. It was a poor, mean, and shortsighted policy not to conciliate and meet those grievances, and to trust to the omnipotence of Government to stifle such an agitation as this at the outset. The agitation was sure to break out again sooner or later. This agitation of the uncovenanted services of India had been simmering for ten or fifteen years: and he asked the outset. The agitation was sure to break out again sooner or later. This agitation of the uncovenanted services of India had been simmering for ten or fifteen years; and he asked the House to believe that he certainly should not advocate the recognition of the grievances complained of if he did not believe they were just and well-founded. (Hear, hear.) There were two conditions necessary to the attainment of contented and efficient service—(1) satisfaction with the present conditions of service; and (2) a mind at ease about the future. Unless the mind of a servant was possessed of those two ideas they would not obtain a satisfactory and a contented service. The grievances complained of in this instance had again and again received the endorsement of the Government of India. They had been put forward in despatches from the other side, but they had been rejected here. It was a great misfortune that in these cases it was impossible to know who had to be reckoned with. There was a figurehead in the shape of a Secretary of State for India, and another in that of an Under-Secretary, but the real persons in power who pulled all the wires were the fifteen irresponsible elderly gentlemen who received £1,200 a year each who formed the Council. (Hear, hear.) He hoped that it would not be very long before the House arrived at the conclusion that this Council was an anachronism in these days of railways and telegraphs. (Hear hear.) A Council so constituted must of Council was an anachronism in these days of railways and telegraphs. (Hear, hear.) A Council so constituted must of necessity be behind the age, and he had no doubt that it was the advice of that Council which caused the countenance of the hon. member for Chatham to be as repellant as it appeared to be that night. (Hear, hear, and a laugh.) The uncovenanted service of India included certainly some of not the least useful public servents in India who were the chief least useful public servants in India, who were the chief instruments of civilisation in that part of the Empire. (Hear, hear.) Rising from those who swept out the offices and from junior clerks the service now comprised men who had assisted in the social, moral, and material progress of There were now thousands of officials engaged in the service who were men of high respectability and of superior service who were men of high respectability and of superior education. Among them were several of our most eminent Judges, and to those in that service had been intrusted the management of Indian University education, of the system of irrigation, of the construction of the railways, of the extension of the telegraphs, of the scientific forestay, and of agriculture in India. But, notwithstanding the great services they had performed, not one of them was to be found upon any of the Councils of the country, and they had no means of making their influence felt, either in India or in London. One of the great grievances of the service was that those who were engaged in it were only allowed two years' furlough in

At present the covenanted Civil thirty years of service. Shirty years of service. At present the covenanted Civil servant had six years' furlough given him in twenty-five years' service, so that after twenty-one years' service in India he retired with a pension of £500 a year. Leave was given solely because it was necessary in a climate like India for the health and efficiency of the service. Why, then, were the same advantages not extended to the uncovenanted service? He had no wish to take up the time of the House with these details; all he wanted was that the Government should consent to refer these questions to a small Select Committee of the House. It was stated that the Government of India had no objection to this inquiry, and he did not understand, therefore, why the officials at Whitehall should raise any difficulty. The uncovenanted Civil servants now only got something like two years' furlough in thirty years' service. Why should the same advantages not be extended to them Why should the same advantages not be extended to them that were enjoyed by covenanted officers occupying similar positions? In some departments covenanted juniors now enjoyed greater privileges than the heads of their departments who were in the uncovenanted service. What discipline could be maintained when the head of a department was branded as inferior by having an inferior leave to that enjoyed by his junior? Some years ago, in 1876, suddenly every gentleman drawing 500 rupees per month was admitted to the benefits of schedule A, but though hundreds had since obtained that position they were kept under the inferior conditions. To continue this treatment would be distinctly continue the recommendations and but the Commendations. ditions. To continue this treatment would be distinctly contrary to the recommendations made by the Government of India in 1870, which advised that the privileges granted to Civil servants appointed in England should be extended to the uncovenanted service. He asked the House to put an end to the unjust anomaly that people in the same position and serving on the same basis should be treated differently. Whatever remedy the Government proposed in this matter he trusted would be no sham remedy. With regard to the latter part of his motion, he might say that the grievance to which it referred affected every man in the service. In this matter he made no claim upon the Government on the ground of law. The legal position of the Government on this point was law. The legal position of the Government on the ground of law. The legal position of the Government on this point was unassailable; but so was the legal position of Shylock. (Laughter and cheers.) What he wanted the House to contact was what were the obvious intentions of the contracting parties at the time the contract was entered into. In the year 1855 the directors of the East India Company came to the conclusion that a fair maximum pension to give was £500 or conclusion that a fair maximum pension to give was £5000 for 5,000 rupees; and the other pension, £400 or 4,000 rupees, and £200 or 2,000 rupees. The Government of India subsequently passed a resolution to that effect. As time went on the uncovenanted servants wished to have their pensions paid in this country, but they were told by the Secretary of State that hitherto the pensions had been paid in India. That was true, no doubt, but at the time the pensions were fixed there was not a single person who expected for one moment that the value of the rupee would ever fall so low as 1s. 4d. The difference between 2s. and 1s. 4d. was a matter of 30 per cent., and the pensions to which he was referring had therefore been reduced to that extent. This was a very serious matter. For ten years the rupee did not vary a penny, but since 1874 there had been a steady fall in the value of the rupee, and he could see no bottom. The result was that one-third of the pension of an uncovenanted servant was gone. Would the Under-Secretary get up and say that £300 per annum was an adequate maximum pension for thirty-three years' hard work in a tropical climate? It was a common thing to say that the fall in exchange was due to the fall of silver. It was, no doubt, to a certain extent, but the extreme there was not a single person who expected for one moment thing to say that the fall in exchange was due to the fall or silver. It was, no doubt, to a certain extent, but the extreme fall was due to the direct action of the Government. He would not go into the theory of foreign exchanges, but he might say in his belief that a large portion of the fall was due to the enormous yearly increase of the home changes. (Hear, hear.)—The Government gained indirectly by the fall in exchange, because it had increased the wealth of India and its ax-paying power. If his proposals were adopted there need tax-paying power. If his proposals were adopted there need be no fresh taxation. A little economy would supply the amount required. It was about £20,000, and the abolition of the India House alone would do that. (Laughter.) This extra sum had been spent last year on the Viceregal tour. It could be saved on the annual migration to Simla, where buildings had been erected at great cost, so that the Government could scarcely take refuge in the plea of poverty. There were other employers besides the Government who had to were other employers besides the Government who had to deal with the fall in exchange. His own employés came home on furlough once in five years. They came home on half-pay, which they drew in India in rupees. When the exchange fell they represented the inadequacy of the payment; and the rate of exchange was fixed at 2s. per rupee. This was not done out of philanthropy, but simply that the employés might be treated fairly. A pension of £300 now was exactly equal to what £500 was fourteen years are and it was unjust that to what £500 was fourteen years ago, and it was unjust that those who had been led to expect pensions of £500 should receive only £300. The official conditions of the service and even the Cooper's Hill prospectus justified the belief that the pensions that were now £300 were to have been £500. While taking the rupee at the lowest rate in this country, the Government took it at the highest rate going in India, and therefore mulcted twelve poor gentlemen who drew their pensions there. Seamen who had entered into contracts to be paid in rupees in India had been accustomed to be paid at 2s per rupee, and when it was lowered the Government supported a protest that was made on behalf of the seamen in spite of the fact that the grounds of the protest were equally applicable to their mode of paying pensions. In conclusion, he said he believed he should not appeal in vain to the House on behalf of aged servants of the State, and he moved his resolution

Sir J. Gorst thought that the uncovenanted servants were to be congratulated upon having secured so eloquent an advocate of their cause as the hon, member for Hull. It was imcate of their cause as the hon. member for Hull. It was impossible that their case could have been put more forcibly and clearly, and there was no need for the hon. member to say "I am no orator, as Brutus is." He agreed with every word of praise that had been said of the uncovenanted services, and if it was his painful duty, as the representative of the taxpayers, to oppose this motion he hoped the hon. member would not think it was from any want of sympathy for the troubles of his clients. In one respect the hon, member was mistaken. This question had received the anxious consideration of the Secretary of State and himself and of those fossil Indians as Secretary of State and himself and of those fossil Indians, as Secretary of State and himself and of those fossil Indians, as the hon member called them, the members of the Council. He must remind the House that there were two sides to this question. The hon member had spoken as if the uncovenantial Civil Service consisted exclusively of Europeans, whereas the bulk of them were Natives. And although the Europeans among them found many advocates in that House, the Natives were in a very different position, and it was his duty to represent their interests and feelings. In one department, for example—viz., executive and judicial officers—there were 139 Europeans only, and 2,449 Natives. The Natives viewed the matter in a very different light from the hon member. Many of them thought that they ought to have the whole, or nearly the whole, of the uncovenanted service to themselves, Many of them thought that they ought to have the whole, or nearly the whole, of the uncovenanted service to themselves, and made it a grievance that any difference at all should exist between themselves and Europeans. They thought it unfair that Europeans should receive more pay for the same work. He gave this as an exaggerated view on the side opposed to that of the hon. member. But the Government of India rightly considered that it was now, and would be for many years, the highest interest of India that in all departments of the public service, and especially in the higher grades, there should be a strong leaven of Europeans, and the Government was desirous of maintaining the existing advantages to the European servants, so as to make the service more attractive. He warned his hon. friend and the House that at any time unduly to extend the privileges of the European servants might give rise to such action as might cause the distinction between Europeans and Natives to be swept away. The House ought to remember the great distinction between the covenanted and uncovenanted branches. The former was an Imperial service, open by competitive examination the covenanted and uncovenanted branches. The former was an Imperial service, open by competitive examination to all the Queen's subjects, British, Indian, and colonial. The uncovenanted branch was recruited mainly in India by a great variety of means. Some were appointed by competitive examination of a less stringent kind than the covenanted service; some by pure nomination on the part of the Secretary of State, the Government of India, or the local governments and others again were tryined in some such ingovernments, and others, again, were trained in some such in-stitution as Coopers Hill, or went straight from school. If those gentlemen preferred the wider and easier gate of the uncovenanted service to the narrower and more difficult entrance by the covenanted service to the Indian public service, they had no right to complain that they were treated upon different terms from those who were covenanted servants upon different terms from those who were covenanted servants—(hear, hear). The hon member had referred to the report of the Public Service Commission, which had been appointed in consequence of the strong expression of feeling on the part of the Natives of India that they were entitled to a larger share in the official government of their country. The Public Service Commission was a body consisting not only of covenanted servants, but of uncovenanted servants, independent persons, and Natives, so that it was a thoroughly representative body in whom the Natives of India and the people of this country had every confidence. The Commission sat in India, and it had been a vast amount of evidence, and its report was and it had heard a vast amount of evidence, and its report was now under the consideration of the Indian Government. It would therefore be unbecoming of him to express any opinion upon that report until the views of the Government of India with regard to it had been received—(hear, hear). But, independently of that report, it had been resolved to organise in India a provincial service for the different Presidencies in which Europeans and Natives were to be employed upon identical conditions. In these circumstances it would be very rash on his part were he to express any opinion as to whether it was desirable or not to place the un covenanted servants upon the same footing as the covenanted servants. Having said so much on the question in a preliminary and a general sense, he would now proceed to address himself to the two particular points which the hon. member had brought before the House—namely, those which related to the pension rules and to the payment of the pensions in rupees instead of in pounds sterling. Up to 1872 all the servants of the Indian Government who were not covenanted were treated very unfavourably by the rules, on the ground that, instead of being recruited in England, they were recruited in India, and were therefore not persuaded to leave their homes. But in 1872 some new rules were made, under which those who had entered the service before that date were anoral favourably treated. The hon. member had said that there were anomalies in the treatment of officials in the public service of every civilised nation—(hear, hear). He fully admitted that the public works and telegraph offices in India had been treated with exceptional favour, but he was afraid that the result of any agitation founded upon that fact would be to inaugurate a system rather of levelling down than of levelling up—(hear, hear). No doubt the strong point which had been made by the hon. member was that which related to the question of pensions. With regard to that point he should like to remind the House that in 1822 even the covenanted servants had no pensions. But from that date 4 per cent. of the salary of every covenanted servant was deducted to form a pension fund, and a similar sum was added by the East India Company to that fund. Therefore the covenanted servants contributed towards their own pensions, which the uncovenanted servants did not. As to the payment of the pensions in rupees instead of in pounds sterling, the system dated from the time when the rupee was really worth 2s. What business had a Government —(hear, hear). Before 1862 the pension of the uncovenanted servants cou

"Letters having been received from persons drawing pensions in this country under the Uncovenanted Service Pension Rules complaining of the recent reduction in the rate of exchange at which such pensions are paid, I have to point out that, prior to the rules of 1863-4, pensions granted to uncovenanted servants were only payable in India, and that, although by section 18 of those rules an option is given of drawing the pension either in India or at the home Treasury, it is at the same time provided that the payments in England will be made at the rate of exchange annually fixed for the adjustment of transactions between the British and Indian Exchequers."

The Civil Pension Code of 1872 said:—"A pension is payable at any Treasury in India or at the home Treasury in London. Payments at the home Treasury are made quarterly at the rate of exchange which is annually fixed for the adjustment of transactions between the British and Indian Exchequers." Could anything, then, be more plain than that if the pensions were to be paid in England it was distinctly laid down that they should be paid at that rate of exchange? He hoped he had established to the satisfaction of the House that the right to draw pensions in England was a concession, and that they were to be drawn at the rate of exchange fixed for the adjustment of transactions between the two Treasuries. The Government of India argued that the pension bore a proportion to the pay, and that in India that proportion was higher than in almost any other country in the world. It was almost one-half, and when you turned those pensions into sterling money you made them more than one-half and enhanced them out of all proportion to the pay. Another argument was that in recent times several branches of the service, engineer officers and others, had had enhanced pensions granted them because of the fall in the exchange. If those officers were to obtain a larger number of rupees was it reasonable that they should demand that this increased number should be paid at more than the rate of exchange? He hoped the House would remember before assenting to a resolution like this that we could not stop at the paltry £20,000 to which the hon. gentleman referred. You could not restrict a privilege of this kind to the officers resident in England; you must extend it to the officers in India, and if you paid now 620,000 tens of rupees, if the proposal of the hon. member was carried into effect that sum would be enhanced by 100,000 or 150,000 tens of rupees. The hon. member said that low pensions prevented officers from retiring, but to enhance pensions was to offer to these officers direct temptation to retire earlier, and thus the non-effective charge would be swelled by earlier retirements and more numerous pensions. Moreover, officers in active service as well as those whe had retired were suffering from the fall in exchange. There was not an officer who was not more or less crippled in his needs owing to that particular cause, and if the House once yielded to the compassion which the hon. member for Hull had so eloquently put forward, how could they restrict it to the case of pensioners who had retired and refuse it to those still in actual service? And not only the uncovenanted civil servants but the Government of India itself and the poor people of India had suffered by the fall in the rupee, and in consequence the salt tax had had to be put on. How inconsistent it would be for the House at the beginning of the Session to be lamenting because the Government of India had to extract more money from the pockets of the poor Indian taxpayers, and then, when the Session was well advanced, to pass a resolution which would saddle them on behalf of the retired uncovenanted civil servants with further payments still? He observed many hon, gentlemen present who had distinguished themselves by their criticism of English pensions, and who would not suffer anything more in the shape of pensions than the State was under obligation to pay. Would they be so inconsistent as to vote for a resolution which confessedly asked the House not to pay something which the State was under obligation to pay, but to pay sums of money merely

Sir R. Letheridge rose to support the motion of the hon member for Hull and to join in asking the Government to grant at least a Committee of Inquiry into what was undoubtedly a case of hardship. He did so with all the more pleasure that the hon. member had declared clearly that this motion was not in any way brought forward in disparagement of those other glorious services—the covenanted and the military—which had done so much for the traditions of the British name in India. In this motion they protested against what was merely a survival of the ancient privileges of the covenanted bureaucracy in India, in so far as they pressed heavily on the uncovenanted body. With regard to the argument that the Natives of India were desirous and capable of filling many of the appointments now held by English uncovenanted servants, he would merely reply that, so far as the Natives were able and qualified, the Government were bound to admit them. (Hear, hear.) Therefore the motion did not touch that point at all. With regard to the objection of the Under-Secretary of State that Natives might receive these appointments, he would call attention to the definition laid down by the Government of India as to these uncovenanted appointments. In the despatch of October 14, 1870, the Government of India thus described the service of which they were speaking. The Government said it had been established that many important offices could not ordinarily be filled either by Natives of India or by the officers of the covenanted civilians the difficulty they were discussing could never have risen. It was clear that they could not be filled by Natives of India. If they could not be end the covenanted civilians who had simply passed the competitive examination on general subjects in London, to build barracks or to do general engineering work in India, or to lecture to the undergraduates of the University of Calcutta on the lunar theory and other difficult subjects of learning. The members of the service with which they were dealing this eveni Government would make some concession to the representa-Government would make some concession to the representa-tions of the hon. member for Hull. Great dissatisfaction pre-vailed at the meagre results which had followed from the in-quiries of the last Royal Commission, which was felt to be due to the fact that there was a large preponderance of high officials in the covenanted service upon that Commission. The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER said that the main question which had been brought before the House that evening was whether the members of the uncovenanted service were entitled to be paid their pensions in sterling instead vice were entitled to be paid their pensions in sterling instead of in Indian currency. That was a subject upon which the arguments on both sides had been so clearly stated that no inquiry before a Select Committee could throw further light It was a question in which there were two conflicting considerations—one was sympathy with the uncovenanted Civil servants and the other was the most grave question whether in regard to this one particular class of officials they ought, without the consent of the Indian Government and against its representations, to lay it down that these pensions should be paid in sterling at the expense of the Indian taxagainst his representations, to lay it down that these pensions should be paid in sterling at the expense of the Indian tax-payer. Early in the debate the statement was made that the covenanted and the uncovenanted Civil servants were in a similar position, except that the covenanted servants were under the patronage of the Home Government and the uncovenanted of the Indian Government. He did not wish it to go forth that the covenanted service was a matter of patronage on the part of the Home Government. The covenanted Civil servants had to undergo an expensive education, and were admitted by competition. The House had been appealed to on behalf of the unconvenanted servants as if they were its servants, and as if the House had it at its disposal to be generous to them. They had been asked why they should exact their claims as Shylocks; but he would remind the House that what they were asked to do was at the expense of the Indian taxpayer. No doubt the fact of being paid in Indian currency was a grievance which was shared by a vast number of the servants of the Indian Government. If to relieve the Civil servants of India from the loss they suffered in consequence of the depreciation of the rupee they were to pay them in sterling, they would have to pay a vast amount of other selevicing along. an consequence of the depreciation of the rupee they were to pay them in sterling, they would have to pay a vast amount of other salaries in sterling also. The Government did not resist this proposal from any want of sympathy with the uncovenanted Civil servants, who, like a vast number of other most meritorious servants of the Indian Government, suffered great hardship from the fall in the value of the rupee. But he ventured to hope the House would not take its stand on the principle that this loss should be met in the case of one particular class when it was clear it would be impossible to stone ticular class, when it was clear it would be impossible to stop at that class, and the effect would be that, without consulta-tion with the representatives of India, they would place a very large increase on the already overburdened resources of that country.

Mr. Courtney said he was not altogether satisfied with the speeches of the Under-Secretary and the Chancellor of the speeches of the Under-Secretary and the Chancellor of the Exchequer, because those speakers omitted one argument which was the most cogent of all. The hon member for North Kensington admitted that the uncovenanted servants who resided in India had suffered no loss since they were paid in rupes, and the value of the rupee had not depreciated in India. It would now purchase in India as much commodities as it did in the past. The Chancellor of the Exchequer had spoken of the "grievous hardship" suffered by uncovenanted servants who received their pensions in England. He demurred to that assertion. It was true that a man entitled to a pension of 5,000 rupees would some twenty years ago have received to that assertion. It was true that a man entitled to a pension of 5,000 rupees would some twenty years ago have received £500 in England, whereas now he would only receive about £400, but the purchasing power of the sovereign had increased, and £400 would now purchase as much of the commodities of life as £500 did twenty years ago. This was the firm ground which should be taken up on this question—(hear, hear.)

The House divided, and the numbers were—

JUNE 12.

THL "FORWARD" POLICY IN INDIA.

Mr. Schwann asked the Under-Secretary of State for India whether it was the intention of the Indian Government to carry out with regard to Tibet the policy of aggression advocated by various Anglo-Indian journals under the name of the "forward" policy.

Sir J. Gorst: The Government of India have no intention of pursuing a policy of aggression towards Tibet.

THE OUT-STILL SYSTEM IN BENGAL.

Mr. S. Smith asked the Under-Secretary for India whether his attention had been drawn to the following statements in a recent despatch from the secretary to the Indian Association at Calcutta to the Chief Secretary to the Government of "The Committee have recently made inquiries into the working of the out-still system in some of the chief places in the Hooghly and the Howrah districts, where out-stills have been opened. From almost everywhere the same tale is heard of persons lying dead drunk on the roads in the vicinity of the out-still, of attempted outrages on the passersby, of quarrels and fights, and of the general increase of crime. The liquor has been cheapened by nearly three-fourths. A bottle of liquor which formerly cost a rupee may now be had for four annas;"

and whether he could state what answer had been given thereto by the Government of Bengal.

Sir J. Gorst: The Secretary of the Indian Association at Calcutta has not informed the Secretary of State of his recent letter to the Government of Bengal, nor of the answer given thereto by the Government of Bengal. A correspondence between a local governor and an association established in Calcutta would be conducted in India, without reference to the India Office.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

THE Government of India have sanctioned the publication, in book form, of the regimental calls of all Native corps and batteries in the Bengal Presidency, for free issue to the corps and batteries concerned.

THE service for pension which regulates the leave pay admissible under the leave rules for the Staff Corps counts, in the case of continuous service of Royal Engineers subject to those rules, from the date of their first arrival in India, with the addition of three years' British service, and is not the service for British pension, which latter counts continuously from date of commission.

THE Secretary of State has decided that officers of the Royal Engineers who elect for continuous service in India shall count their service for pension from the date of their transfer to the Indian establishment, and thereafter all periods during which Indian establishment, and thereafter all periods during which they may receive pay from Indian revenues shall so reckon, three years of British service being also allowed to count as Indian service. If any officer of Royal Engineers who has already elected for continuous Indian service desires to cancel the same, owing to this change in the conditions, the Government will consider the application if it be certified that but for this ruling, which it is now proposed to correct, he would not have elected for continuous service in India. Such applications must be made before the 1st of July 1888 cations must be made before the 1st of July, 1888.

WITH a view to reducing references now made to army head-quarters it has been decided to make the following changes of procedure as regards the Bengal Presidency:-The discharge of recruits, who after enlistment are rejected on medical grounds, to be sanctioned by General Officers commanding divisions or districts, instead of by his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief. Applications for compensation in lieu of clothing to be forwarded direct to the Controller of Military Accounts, for disposal of General Officers commanding divisions. sions and districts, instead of through the Adjutant-General's

THE members of the Army Mobilisation Committee have still some months work before them.

THE guns of the three new batteries of 12-pounders which have been sent out to India are at present in the hands of the Ordnance Department, but will shortly be ready for issue.

IT is reported that the 4th Battalion Rifle Brigade will proceed to Burma next relief for service there before proceeding home.

THE General Officer Commanding the Allahabad Division has submitted, for the favourable consideration of the military authorities of the Government of India, certain proposals for the replacement of the accourrements of the Behar Light Horse. Some attention might also be paid to the accourre-ments of the Allahabad Light Horse.

COLONEL CAUTLEY having fallen sick and been sent to Darjeeling for a change, has necessitated the recall from leave of Colonel M. C. Perreau, Controller of Military Accounts,

It is notified that his Excellency the Governor-General in Council has approved of the Mandalay Volunteer Rifles being in future designated the "Upper Burma Volunteer Rifles." The connection of this corps with the Burma State Railway Volunteer Corps, for administrative purposes, will cease from the date of this order.

THE command of the 2nd Battalion South Wales Borderers will become vacant on the 9th proximo, when Colonel R. Upcher, D.S.O., will be placed on half-pay on completion of six years' service as a regimental Lieut.-Colonel. It is understood that he will be succeeded in the command by Lieut.-Colonel F. Glennie, now with the 1st Battalion in Dublin.

THE Government of India have ordered the immediate transfer of the Field Pay Office from Mandalay to Rangoon in view to payments for May being made for both Upper and Lower Burma from the latter station. The Circle Pay Office at Rangoon is sanctioned temporarily, and audit offices for pay and commissariat bills will also shortly be established there. Circle Pay Offices eventually will be abolished and payments made direct from treasurers.

COOLIES IN CHITTAGONG.

The most marked feature in the reports on the working of the Inland Emigration Act during the year 1887 is the great falling-off in the number of labourers employed under its provisions. These amounted to 915 in 1884, they declined to 723 in 1885, to 717 in 1886, and have now been reduced to 433. The Commissioner has on previous occasions recommended the withdrawal of the Chittagong district and the Chittagong Hill Tracts from the operation of the Act, which has never been introduced in any other part of Bengal, and he now observes that the system is apparently dying a natural death. This is literally true of the Hill Tracts, where no labourers were employed under the Act during the year, and the observation applies in great measure to the district of Chittagong also. The result is gratifying, inasmuch as it is not connected with any decline in the tea industry, but indicates a disposition on the part of planters to rely upon kindness and fair treatment for retaining the services or their labourers rather than upon penal contracts. In the Resolution on the report for the year 1885 it was stated that, in view of the falling-off in the number of labourers, it appeared that the time was approaching, but had not then arrived, when exceptional provisions for the execution of labour contracts would be unnecessary in Chittagong and in the Chittagong Hill Tracts. The further decline now reported affords a suitable opportunity for the reconsideration of the subject, and the Commissioner will be asked to report, after consulting those best qualified to advise, whether it is desirable to continue the operation in those districts of the clauses of the Act which are applicable only to "labour districts," as defined in the law.

tricts," as defined in the law.

The death-rate among contract coolies was favourable, only 182 per cent., against 239 in the previous year. It appears that the labourers in the gardens, those under the Act as well as others, are well provided for in respect of lodging, drinking-water, and medical attendance. There were sixteen reported desertions; two of the deserters were punished under Section 175 of the Act, most of the others being discharged with a warning, at the request of their employers. The work of inspection appears to have been done thoroughly when gardens were visited, but in some cases no inspection was made, the number of contract labourers being so few. This illustrates the inconvenience of working the Act where the labourers under its provisions constitute a small minority among a large number of free coolies; the inspecting officer, who is the Joint-Magistrate of Chittagong, has either to spend much time to little purpose in travelling to gardens where there may be only two or three labourers under engagements, or to neglect a safeguard contemplated by the Act.

The Government of India not unfrequently gets its most effective support from those whose intention is to abuse and to attack it. A notable instance of this occurs in the case of a pamphlet issued at Bombay by Mr. Dinshaw Edulji Wacha on Indian Abkari Administration. This work is evidently intended for home consumption, and is an attempt to denounce and controvert the Excise-Policy despatch of the Government of India laid before the House of Commons in August last. It is full of strong adjectives, Government and its officers never being mentioned without damnatory epithets, and suggestio fals: being the mildest term applied to their statistics. Mr. Wacha apparently considers that to repeat in abusive language is equivalent to proving the official statements to be misleading. Here is an instance. "If the consumption of spirits takes an upward leap, in spite of still-head duty or tree-tax, the Abkari Commissioner is thrown into a state of high ferment which renders a new operation necessary to bring it down to a lower temperature. That operation is performed, as is well known, by a departmental fiat—a fiat devoid of the most commonplace financial ability, but full of official ardour for raising the drink revenue to a higher pitch. Consumption immediately shows a diminution, and that official is enabled for a year or two to sound his trumpet horn as loud as ever, calling on his credulous Government and the ignorant and uncritical public to witness the 'extremely successful' character of the policy of maximum of revenue and minimum of consumption." This is exactly what the Government has all along contended that it does, and what Mr. Samuel Smith and others contend that it does not.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

LOTUS: A PSYCHOLOGICAL ROMANCE.*

"A soft summer wind sweeping over me, and the scent of the summer jasmine; it lasts for two or three minutes only, and then is gone." What is this mysterious unknown marve! Whence comes it? What is it? Everyone experiences it in turn, but no one knows its origin or its nature. At times, too, the perfume presages visions of flowers; prominent amongst which is a lovely lotus, which disappears as suddenly and unaccountably as it came. What means it all? The answer is not easy of explanation. To some the whole matter is mixed up with the familiar hoax in which the well-known "ghost" plays a prominent and "uncanny" part. "A ghost in the house" are the opening words of this strange, weird tale, and many a reader will cry "fudge" when the end of the story is reached. Whatever may be the theory of the author, not a few will absolutely and emphatically refuse to believe in mad tricks of still madder spirits—will deny credence to the many and manifold actions of incomprehensible and "ununderstandable" beings who are always appearing at odd times and unexpected occasions. But others—the few, the peculiar-minded few—will have it proclaimed that the Almighty Ruler of the Universe allows some sort of intercourse between the living and the dead; that "spirits from the mighty deep" can be called just as much in this, the nineteenth century of grace, as during the reign of the witch of Endor. This may be so, but we are ourselves inclined to doubt the fact. It seems removed from common-sense to suppose that the "disembodied bodies" of departed humanity should revisit the scenes of their earthly labours, and hold converse—can it be said sweet converse!—with those present in the flesh. What embarrassments would flow from such a privilege! Indeed, the work under consideration itself points to some remarkable unpleasantnesses between the dead and the living; and it needs no fervid imagination to draw a harrowing picture of misery, trouble, and anguish of mind should the "dear departed" come back once again, even for a while. We, lov

DRESDEN GALLERY.†

Few travellers there are who do not wend their way at times to the superb Gallery of Pictures in Dresden, in some respects the finest in the world. For such persons a "catalogue raisonnée" cannot be otherwise than a desideratum. The work recently published by Messrs. W. H. Allen and Co. is in every way deserving of the highest praise. In the first place, the alphabetical arrangement has been adopted which enables the reader at a glance to turn to any particular painter without being compelled to exercise knowledge as to the school to which he belonged or the date at which he lived; while, should any reference be needed to the official catalogue, an index at once supplies the requisite numbers. Further, there is an immense amount of information as to the men themselves, and the legends or myths to which their pictures relate. Taken as a whole, the Handbook stands quite unrivalled.

THE SAILOR'S POCKET BOOK.‡

A work which has attained its fifth edition—and this in the course of a handful of years—may well be indifferent alike to the praise and dispraise of a reviewer. It is only, therefore, necessary to say that admirable as was on its first appearance, the little volume which Captain Bedford has compiled for the benefit of the many who "go down in ships to the great deep," it is now well-nigh perfect—at any rate, the improvements have been many and manifold. In its present shape it is a perfect nautical cyclopædia. It is a mine of wealth—an inexhaustible "El dorado."

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL

FRIDAY, JUNE 15, 1888.

THE UNCOVENANTED SERVICES GRIEVANCES.

THE summary rejection by the House of Commons of Mr. King's eloquent appeal on behalf of the Indian Uncovenanted Civil Servants was a mistake likely to be followed by unpleasant consequences. It has not settled the question, but has made the discontent more deeply felt, and discontent amongst a large and important body, carrying on so much of the judicial and executive work of our Indian Empire is an evil which cannot be too greatly deplored. The recognition of the grievances which Mr. King mildly sought for at the hands of the House was a recognition of grievances tangible and acknowledged by the world outside of the House of Commons. If the Imperial Government holds, as it does, that the European element in the Uncovenanted Services of India must be maintained, those grievances must be recognised, for it is impossible to continue maintaining the evils complained of, The theory, that to recognise the complaints of the Europeans in the Uncovenanted Service would be to do injustice to the natives in the same service, is false and foolish. The two are not on the same plane as regards their position in India. The native has his home in the country; the European has not. The native is comparatively rich on one hundred rupees a month; this sum means almost starvation to an English gentleman. The native can generally visit his native city or village in a couple of days and at a trifling cost; the European requires a month's time to get home and another month's time to return, and has to make the journey at a heavy outlay. The native can educate his children on the spot; the European must send his family to England sooner or later, unless he chooses to witness the physical and moral decay of his children. Further instances of dissimilarity might be mentioned, but that they are patent to everyone who has been in India, and who knows the true state of affairs. There is, in fact, no grounds for an analogy between the treatment of Native and European, on which an argument can be based justifying the rejection of the complaints of the latter. And the Uncovenanted Native Civil Servants will be the first to acknowledge this. Why, then, should the Secretary of State for India formulate an argument which is baseless and perpetuate injustice? The matter cannot rest where it now is. The European Uncovenanted Servants must receive better treatment at the hands of the State. They are entitled to a fairer set of furlough rules, and their pensions should not be dependent on fluctuating rates of exchange, or on the value of silver in the world's money markets. Obstacles ought not to be placed in the way of these gentlemen. when they have earned the right to visit their homes in England, and when, after a long and honourable career in India, they finally determine to settle down in their own country, they should not run the risk, which they are now running, of being starved out by the Government they had served so well. There is no hardship to the Natives in the Government redressing these wrongs; there is no advantage given to one class at the expense of another. The Native wants none of these things; they mean life and breath to the Englishman. And so long as Englishmen are required for the Uncovenanted Service in India, so long will these difficulties exist and demand removal. The complaints which Mr. King brought forward were reasonable, just, and true, and sooner or later they must. be recognised by the Imperial Government. And the sooner the better, for the smooth working of Government. in India.

In connection with the question of the grievances of the Uncovenanted Services of India it may not be out of place to notice here the following letter which lately appeared in the leading journal of the Punjab:—

DISTRICT JUDGES IN THE PUNJAB.

SIR,—In an issue of the Civil and Military Gazette of about a week ago the public were informed that the Punjab Government had asked the Government of the North-Western Provinces if three officers could be spared, during the coming leave season, to act as Divisional Judges in the Punjab, and had been told that no officers were available. The first question that would arise to an outsider would be, are men of judicial ability so few, so scarce, that three officers cannot be found in the whole of the Punjab Commission to fill the temporary vacancies caused by furlough and privilege leave in the hot season? To me, who am not an outsider, the question arises, how is it that the Government of the Punjab, that acts on the strictest principles of economy, who, when it needs District Judges to fill temporary vacancies caused in their ranks, confers the powers of a District Judge on its uncovenanted judicial officers (which, however, does not confer on such officers the right to draw one pie more than the pay of their substantive post), did not get over the difficulty by conferring the powers of Divisional Judges on some of its selected uncovenanted judicial officers? Besides regarding it as a mark of honour, there is no doubt these selected officers would be glad of an opportunity of showing that they were qualified to discharge the duties of these offices. As to the selection, there ought to be no dfficulty, for twice the number required are available. To the Government this would be a distinct gain, and on this point alone it ought to commend itself for adoption.

If it be true that the Punjab Government is begging for Divisional Judges outside that Province, it is perhaps the first time that the most energetic Provincial Government of India is out on a begging tour. The Punjab Government has often solicited an exchange for one of its own. hard bargains, and has seldom failed to secure a fair barter, or under pressing circumstances it has even parted with its encumbrance "free of charge." But it is a pity that the Punjab should be so impoverished of judicial talent in its. service as absolutely to beg help from the Government of the North West Provinces. There may be now menvery junior men-among the Civil Servants of those Provinces who are not wanting in ability sufficient to take charge of a Divisional Court; but we agree with Sir Charles Aitchison's view in the matter, that only ex perienced men should be secured for such Courts, and that.

no officer under fifteen years' service should be appointed to a Divisional Judgeship. It is, however, unintelligible to us why the resources of the Uncovenanted Service have not been availed of in this juncture, and three picked men of that Service have not been appointed to the places now going begging. The Government need not be ashamed of gratuitous help; it has already got the services of Uncovenanted District Judges without any extra charge, and the same may be done with the Uncovenanted Divisional So low at present seems the aspiration of Un-Judges. covenanted Judicial officers in the Punjab that the correspondent whose letter we have reproduced, and who we imagine is an Uncovenanted Judge himself, considers such an appointment, without any extra allowance, as "a mark of honour."

THE CHARACTER OF THE NEXT MONSOON.

In a memorandum on the weather for the past five months, and on the probable character of the forthcoming monsoon Mr. Eliot makes the following statements:—Over the greater part of the Afghan highlands the snowfall last winter appears to have been either normal or less in amount than usual, except in the Spinghar and Safed Koh districts, where very heavy snow seems to have fallen at the end of January and the beginning of February. The snowfall over the Western Himalayas was unusually small in amount previous to the last week of March. Much snow fell between that date and the 1st week of March. Much snow fell between that date and the 1st of May in some parts, as Kailang and Leh; but it was probably more or less local. It is almost certain that less snow has fallen than usual over the North-Western Himalayas. In the Eastern Himalayas the snowfall was normal. As regards variations of pressure, it is stated that the pressure variations during January and February were small. The hot weather speedily affected the pressure. The temperature increased rapidly, and at the end of April was two to six degrees above the average. The pressure fell rapidly in Northern India, and at the end of April was below the average. It was above the average over the rest of India. The probable character of the monsoon based on the above indications is as follows:—1. The low pressure, which at present prevails over Northern India, monsoon based on the above indications is as follows:—1. The low pressure, which at present prevails over Northern India, from the Punjab to East Bengal, favours an early establishment of the Bengal current over Bengal and the Gangetic Valley, to which it will probably give a normal supply of abundant rain. 2. The distribution of pressure in Southern India is such as is usually associated with delay in the establishment of the monsoon on the Bombay coast, and with a diminished rainfall in Bombay and the Deccan. 3. Unfavourable conditions in Southern India accompany favourable conditions in North-West India, as was the case last year; hence it is not probable that the monsoon rainfall in the Deccan will be largely reduced below its normal amount. These inferences may be to some extent modified by the changes at present in progress, or, by what has been of greater importance, by the unknown pressure conditions in the Bay of Bengal or the Arabian Sea.

THE P. AND O. STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY.

The ninety-fifth half-yearly meeting of the proprietors of the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company was held at the company's offices, 122, Leadenhall-street, London, on the 5th inst. Mr. Thomas Sutherland, M.P., chairman of the Board of Directors, presided. There was a good attendance.

Mr. A. M. Bethune, the secretary, read the notice convening the meeting.

The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the report, said, that as usual, the foremost item in the report had reference to the fleet. Three of the older vessels, the Zambesi, the Mongolia, and the Tanjore, had been The Charman, in moving the adoption of the report, said, that as usual, the foremost item in the report had reference to the fleet. Three of the older vessels, the Zambesi, the Mongolia, and the Tanjore, had been sold. With regard to the Zambesi, a loss was entailed, but this was compensated for by the profits on the sales of the other two vessels. A question did arise as to whether they should supply the Zambesi with modern machinery and new boilers instead of selling ber, but they adhered to the well-known policy of the Company, by which new vessels are substituted for the old ones instead of their being re-constructed. This policy was firmly laid down after some experience of reconstruction. They had a vessel which was built in what were termed "the good old times," and that ship stood on their books about 1873 or 1874 at £80,000 or £90,000 sterling, and that too after a large amount had been written off for depreciation. As the sale of her at the price of old iron would have entailed an enormous loss, the Board determined to reconstruct her. The cost of reconstruction amounted to—he was almost afraid to tell them the sum—nearly £80,000. Why did he mention this? Simply to explain what must appear to the shareholders an interminable shipbuilding programme. They kept on building new vessels because they disposed of all the old ones as rapidly as circumstances permitted, and more rapidly perhaps than the question of immediate profit and loss would justify, if they were not convinced that that was the true policy for their interests. Notwithstanding the enormous shipbuilding during the past ten years he found, after deducting the three vessels sold, they had at the present time only forty-four vessels actively employed, which was the same as in 1878. There was, however, this singular difference—the tonnage of the present fleet exceeded that of 1878 by 80,000 tons. (Hear, hear.) That was the convincing proof that it was necessary to have vessels of a different type from what they had ten years ago, and of the sou faction both as regards comfort and speed, the Britannia having just completed a passage outwards with the Australian mails in twenty-five and a-half days, or one week under the contract time. (Applause.) He did not, however, approve of these exceptional passages, which in the long run simply meant financial disaster to the shipowners. At the present moment there were two vessels building which were intended for the Indian service, and they proposed to name them the Peninsular and the Oriental, which he trusted would be names of happy omen. These vessels were not so large as the Victoria class, being 1,000 tons smaller, but they would have the same speed. India was a very desirable place to resort to during the winter, and when the British public became better a ware of this fact, and the low price at which they could reach that country, he thought some trade might be worked up for these vessels. The thought some trade might be worked up for these vessels. The two one more point in connection with their shipbuilding programme—they had invited tenders for the construction of a certain number —they had invited tenders for the construction of a certain number of cargo vessels. In adopting this course they were not only safeguarding the company's interest in the carrying trade, but they were making preparations to meet the development which had taken place in the manufacturing trade of India. It might, perhap, astonish some gentlemen to hear that Bombay was at the present moment completely eclipsing Manchester in manufacturing cotton goods—more especially cotton yaru—for markets in China and Japan. Owing, he presumed, to the appreciation of gold, and to the cheapness of wages in India to its silver currency, the Bombay manufacturer was now able to undersell the Manchester manufacturer in that particular description of goods more especially, and, as a matter of fact, the extension of the trade during the last two or three years had been singularly of the trade during the last two or three years had been singularly great. It was a trade which must necessarily be carried on, as they found from experience, at low rates of freight, and, consequently, these vessels were being specially constructed to meet the economical requirements of that trade. Passing to the next paragraph in the report, which had reference to the mail contracts, he was gratified to be able to state that the new service which they had inaugurated in the present contract, by which the mails were carried in the large London steamers from Brindisi through the Suez Canal, instead of by the o orland route, had proved eminently satisfactory. instead of by the o orland route, had proved eminently satisfactory, not only as regarded the acceleration of the mail service but also as regarded the comfort and convenience of the passengers travelling by those vessels. The delay in settling the Australian mail contract, which came to an end last January, arose, he might now say, through a pardonable desire on the part of the colonies to obtain their mail contracts upon the cheapest possible terms; but finally the rate of payment had been settled upon the basis of payments they had hithertone the part of the part o ment had been settled upon the basis of payments they had hither to received, but with the advantage to the public of a far superior service. This contract had to pass through the Houses of Parliament in Australia and at Westminster, but he had not the least doubt as to its surviving these ordeals. The directors had also entered into a temporary arrangement with the Italian Government for a fortnightly service between Venice, Brindisi and Alexandria, the rate of payment for the same being £30,000. Coming to the financial aspect of affairs, he said he was under the disadvantage of being unable to speak with adequate authority, because they had no figures before them on which to base their observations; but he would put the facts of the case as briefly and clearly as possible. In their outward traffic from England their revenue had met with a satisfactory improvement during the past six months, while, on the other hand, on all their lines—with the excep-tion of Australia—their homeward traffic had been the cause of serious disappointment. From Bombay, Calcutta, and from China they also had a serious falling off in the receipts. He held in his hands letters from both sides of India, containing most melancholy accounts of the from both sides of India, containing most melancholy accounts of the freight business during the past six months. The long and the shot of the matter, however, was this: there would still have be n a balance of revenue in their favour on the six months had it not been for the fact that during the present year they fell upon a reduction in the mail subsidy to the extent of nearly £100,000. The reduction of the mail subsidy was an important matter, especially as they had been compelled to increase their expenditure on the coal account in order to gain a higher speed; but they could content themselves with the reflection that the directors had got the last farthing which it was possible to obtain. He certainly anticipated that they would have a much better result to communicate when he last had the pleasure of addressing them. The views he expressed on that occasion he had been told were too sanguine, but he considered he was justified in taking a sanguine view. He saw by the Board of Trade returns for the first four months of this year—up to the end of April—that the amounts of our exports and imports had board of frace returns for the first four months of this year—up the end of April—that the amounts of our exports and imports had increased to the extent of between £9,000,000 and £10,000,000 sterling, but he was sorry to say that very little of that trade, or at least the important portion of it came from India. On the contrary, there was in the Indian trade a distinct falling off in the quantity of wheat and cotton exported to Great Britain, and it was to this cause, combined with the surplus tonnage seeking cargoes, that the low rates were attributable. In regard to the China trade the export trade from China with respect to rates of freight was in astill more dreary condition, comparatively speaking, than that from India. At this time of the year they were in what was called the height of the tea season. From China, under normal circumstances, the rate of freight on tea and cargo of a valuable kind was 60s. per ton. At the present moment the rate of freight from China was exactly 20s. per ton. That was owing to circumstances to which he had been obliged to allude at several of their meetings-namely, the enormous competition there was for the tneir meetings—namely, the enormous competition there was for the carrying of fine cargo, and the tendency of rates for fine cargo to fall to the level of rates on common goods. Without combination on the part of shipowners engaged in carrying the finer description of cargoes it was impossible, as he had before stated, to prevent the rates upon such goods falling to a deplorable level. They were at the present moment being sued for heavy damages for "conspiring" with others—he believed that was the word—to maintain the rates upon cargoes of the care thing like their prormal level. ten at something like their normal level. As the case was still subjudice it would be improper and irregular to make any further observations on it. Against the serious decline in homeward freights, the vations on it. Against the serious decline in homeward freights, the reduction in the amount of the mail subsidy, and the increased consumption of coal, there were one or two balancing factors. In the first place they had an increased outward traffic, and in the second place they had an increase—small, yet satisfactory—in the passenger traffic. Unfortunately they had another difficulty to deal with, and that was the continued description of silver. These homeward freights interest the second place that the second place they had another difficulty to deal with, and that was the continued description of silver. These homeward freights interest the second place that the second place that the second place they have been seco Unfortunately they had another difficulty to deal with, and that was the continued depreciation of silver. Unless homeward freights improved they would have to work very hard to maintain their position. In the past, however, the company had—and this was matter for considerable satisfaction—fortified the position of the company, and looked to the reserves thoroughly well. They were, therefore, in a more or less independent position, and however disagreeable, however unfortunate a serious fluctuation in their revenue might be and must be, that fluctuation would not, he ventured to believe, affect in the slightest degree the stability of the company. (Applause.)

Lord Sudeley seconded the adoption of the report, which was unanimously agreed to.

On the motion of the Chairman, seconded by Mr. Jno. Franks, an

OBITUARY.

SIR FRANK SOUTER.—Sir Frank Souter, the popular Bombay Commissioner of Police, died suddenly at Ootacamund on the 4th inst. The funeral took place on the 6th, the Governor the 4th inst. The funeral took place on the 6th, the Governor of Madras attending as chief mourner, with the Commander-in-Chief, Sir Charles Sargent, the personal staffs of the Governor and the Commander-in-Chief, the Army Head-quarters Staff, the Members ot Council, the Secretaries to the Government, the heads of departments, the Inspector-General of Police, and the officers and general society of Ootacamund. The Neilgherry Volunteers, of which regiment the Governor is colonel, paraded at Sir Frank Souter's house, and preceded the cortêge to the church, the massed Governor's and Volunteers' bands playing the "Dead March" in Saul. A party of the Royal Fusiliers, which came from Wellington by special order of the Commander-in-Chief, met the procession, and took the coffin at the church. The road was lined with police. At the church the procession was met by the Bishop of Madras and his chaplain. The chaplain conducted the service at the church and the bishop officiated conducted the service at the church and the bishop officiated at the grave. After a period of distinguished services, during which he repeatedly exhibited great personal gallantry and exceptional powers of administration, in connection with the momentous trouble of the Mutir Y capturing several rebel chiefs and notorious outlaws, he was appointed in 1864 to the responsible office of Commissioner of Police at Bombay. He succeeded throughout his long tenure of this office by his unswerving rectitude of purpose and courteous, conciliatory demeanour in securing the respect, confidence, and affection of every section of the community. His death has caused a blank which it will be very difficult to fill. The Bombay Corporation has passed a resolution expressing its profound appreciation of the loss sustained by the public, and its sincere sympathy with the widow in her bereavement. widow in her bereavement.

GENERAL FREDERICK DARLEY GEORGE.—By the death of General Frederick Darley George, C.B., which occurred on the 2nd inst. at his residence, 67, Brunswick-place, Brighton, aged eighty, the Army has lost an officer who had seen much service in India. Entering the army as ensign (by purchase) in 1825, General George served throughout the campaign in Scinde in 1842 and 1843 under Sir Charles Napier, and while serving with him was present at the destruction of Imaumghur in the desert, and also at the battles of Meeanee and Hydera-bad, at which last he commanded the 22nd Regiment, receiving for his gallant services a medal, the brevet of major, and the appointment of C.B. The deceased general served also throughout the campaign in the Southern Mahratta country and in the Southern Concan in 1844 and 1845, and commanded a corps of detachments at the taking of the Patahs on the northern corps of detachments at the taking of the Patahs on the northern fronts of Panulla and Pownghur, and was present at the investment and capture of both those forts, being in command of the left flank post. He served again during the operations against the forts Mannahur and Munsontosh in the Southern Concan, and commanded the left wing of the 22nd Regiment, and afterwards commanded the field brigade at Kolapore. His commissions bore date—lieutenant (purchased), 1827; captain (purchased), 1833; brevet-major, 1843; major, 1849; brevet lieutenant-colonel, 1833; colonel, 1854; lieutenant-colonel, 1858; major-general, 1866; lieutenant-general; 1874; and general, 1877. He was created C.B. in 1843, and married a daughter of Mr. J. Farlem, of Blackheath.

General Sir Duncan Alexander Cameron.—General

GENERAL SIR DUNCAN ALEXANDER CAMERON.—General Sir Duncan Alexander Cameron, G.C.B., died at Blackheath on the 7th inst. This distinguished officer was born in the year 1808, and the date of his first commission was 1825. He became captain in 1833, major in 1839, colonel in 1854, and major-general in 1859, and finally won the full rank of general after nearly fifty years of service. He was placed on the retired list in 1878. He served with distinction throughout the war in the Crimea where he was in command of the 42nd tired list in 1878. He served with distinction throughout the war in the Crimea, where he was in command of the 42nd Highlanders (the Black Watch) at the battle of the Alma, and commanded the Highland Brigade at the battle of Balaclava. He was further engaged in the expedition to Kertch and a the siege of Sebastopol, and in the assault on the Redan of the 18th of June. For his services he was mentioned in despatches and received the medal, with three clasps, as well as many foreign distinctions. He was made an officer of the Legion of Honour, and received also the Sardinian and Turkish medals and the 3rd Class of the Medjidie. At the end of the war he received his C.B. In the New Zealand war, 1863-65, he was in command of the forces and conducted the operations at Kolikara, Kohasoa, Tangiriri, the Gate Pah, and other battles. For these he was again mentioned in despatches, gained the Kolikara, Kohasoa, Tangiriri, the Gate Pah, and other battles. For these he was again mentioned in despatches, gained the medal, received the thanks of the Legislative Council of the colony, and was promoted to K.C.B. Sir Duncan Cameron was made colonel of his old regiment, the Black Watch, in 1863, and he was Governor of the Military College at Sandhurst from 1868 to 1875. In 1873, on his attaining the rank of general, he was promoted to be G.C.B. Sir Duncan married, in 1873, Flora, daughter of Dr. Andrew Maclean; she died in 1875.

THE MYSORE GOLD MINING COMPANY, LIMITED.—An extraordinary general meeting of the Mysore Gold Mining Company, Limited, will be held on the 22nd inst., to confirm the resolution which was unanimously passed at the meeting held on the 1st inst., in reference to the increase of the capital of the company to £175,000, by the issue of 25,000 Ordinary Shares of £1 each, at a premium of £1. The proportion will be one new Share for every six old Shares now held.

The Pioneer is responsible for the following statement:—
"It is only a year or two since that the Secretary of State declared that the question of any interference with the Presidency Armies system must be considered as definitely closed. It is satisfactory to know that a more rational view at last dency Armies system must be considered as definitely closed. It is satisfactory to know that a more rational view at last obtains at the India Office, and that there is, in fact, every prospect of this subject being immediately re-opened. The unanimity of three Viceroys so different in most respects as Lord Lytton, Lord Ripon, and our present ruler seems to have had its effect now that the subject of military efficiency has been brought seriously home to the English Cabinet, and it is quite possible that the Secretary of State may be found taking action in the matter before Lord Dufferin leaves India.

CAN Wrong Prevail ?—Truth is, indeed, stranger than fiction, as appears by the remarkably lucid statement of the case of the Earl of Mar, in "Nuda Veritas—Shall Wrong Prevail?"—which shows that, despite the righteous Act of Parliament, passed in 1885, declaring that the Earl of Mar had been in possession of that ancient earldom since the death of his uncle, the previous earl, in 1866, the estates entailed upon histitle in 1739, inherited and enjoyed by the last earl as heir general, the right of his mother, until the day of his death, have "got into" the possession of the Earl of Kellie. These estates, it must be remembered, have no connection whatever as regards the entail of 1739, with the estates held by the Earl of Mar in the time of Queen Mary, but were purchased after the attainder of 1715, and settled on the "heir general" in perpetuity; and it was under this settlement that they passed (with the title, when restored in 1824) to John. Francis, Earl of Mar, in succession to his mother, Lady Francis Erskine, sole heiress of the previous earl, her father, and not, of course, in succession to her husband, Mr. James Erskine, who was a commoner, and from whom is descended the Earl of Kellie. As a matter of fact, Mr. James Erskine had nothing whatever to do with the succession of the Earldom of Mar, and, of course, could not, and never had, anything todo with the estates settled on that earldom by the entail of nothing whatever to do with the succession of the Earldom of Mar, and, of course, could not, and never had, anything to do with the estates settled on that earldom by the entail of 1739. The historic pearage has, five times, passed through female lines. Lord Kellie asked the House of Lords not to espouse the cause of the Earl of Mar on the plea that the object of the latter was to "deprive him of property which he and his father had been in possession for twenty years." But the possession has been disputed, and the Earl of Mar is surely not to be excluded from his inheritance by "prescription," based upon usurpation—nor should it be an offence in any British subject to demand the restitution of his own property. property.

"VOICE OF INDIA. THE

TO THE UBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing montruty (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Foice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

ing between the rulers and the rulers, and known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian beople.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances as fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the fact thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

THE "TROPICAL AGRICULTURIST."

As a medium for English, American, and Australian ADVERTISEMENTS of goods suitable for the tropics, India, as well as Ceylon, the Straits Settlements, Java, and West Indies Central America being included in that term), or connected with agriculture, the TROPICAL AGRICULTURIST stands unrivalled, the work being constantly in the hands of Native as well as European and American agriculturists. Being a Monthly Periodical, the TROPICAL AGRICULTURIST lies on the table and is very often referred to during each month, a fact which advertisers will know how to appreciate.

Mr. W. T. Thiselton Dyer, F.L.S., C.M.G., Assistant Director of Kew Gardens, writing of the T. A., refers to it as "an astonishing repertory of everything relating to the economic botany of the East."

Wanted agents, at home and abroad, to obtain orders for watches and jewellery on our new instalment system, by weekly or monthly payments. Most beneficial to subscribers and agents, as money paid for rent of showy shops and shopmen are thus saved to members joining our instalment system. Also trustworthy men wanted in every ship, regiment, and battery to act as agents, to enable naval and military men to secure good, reliable watches at a small profit above the actual cost.

Naval and military agents when leaving the service, desirous of being appointed district agents or travellers, are invited to apply for the post. Means of earning a good income were never before placed so easily in the reach of intelligent, energetic naval or military men leaving the service. Terms on application.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, JUNE 25, 1888.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 5th June; from Allahabad and Madras to the 3rd June; and from Calcutta to the 2nd June.

A MEETING of the members of the Uncovenanted Civil Service was held in the Town Hall on the afternoon of June 4th, when the following resolutions were adopted:—

The first resolution was proposed by Mr. R. B. Buckley, seconded by Mr. J. Eliot:—"That in consideration of the facts, (1) that the whole tenur of the despatches, first from the Court of Directors, and later from the Secretary of State, as well as of the resolutions of the Government of India, on the subject of pensions, was such as to create in the minds of the members of the so-called Uncovenanted Civil Service a reasonable expectation that their pensions on retirement to Europe would be substantially those due to them at the rate of two shillings to the rupee prevailing when those despatches and resolutions were issued; (2) that up to a comparatively recent date a notice was issued, under the authority of the Government, which represented the rupee as being about equal to two shillings; (3) that the rupee has seriously depreciated in value in relation to gold, and that this depreciation has caused a severe loss and actual distress to officers retiring to Europe, and seems likely to cause more loss and greater distress in the future, this meeting earnestly hopes that Government will adopt measures to save its retiring officers from the unfortunate action of circumstances, which were entirely unforeseen, both by Government and its servants, until comparatively recent years, and to remove the painful uncertainty which at present exists as to the amount of their future incomes by paying pensions in Europe and the Colonies at a fixed rate of exchange, which rate, in the opinion of the meeting, should be two shillings to the rupee."

The second resolution was proposed by Mr. B. Ribbentrop, and seconded by J. E. O'Connor:—"That the members of the so-called Uncovenanted Service have seen with concern the statement made, apparently on good grounds, that the suggestion has been sent from the India Office to the Government of India for the permanent adoption of a fixed rate of one shilling and eightpence for the payment of rupee pensions payable in England; that this meeting is satisfied that the adoption of a materially lower rate than two shillings to the rupee would be gravely proju dicial to the interests of retired and retiring members of the public service who may reasonably, and in equity, ask to be paid at or about that rate; that this meeting trusts, therefore, that the proposal said to have been made by the India Office may not be assented to, or any opinion thereon authoritatively expressed by the Government of India, until the unanimous opinion and desire of the officers affected have been fully considered."

The third resolution was proposed by Mr. R. G. Macdonald, and seconded by Mr. P. V. Luke:—"That the memorial drafted by the Uncovenanted Civil Service Association in London, and now being circulated for signanature for submission to the House of Commons, stating the case of the service, and praying, amongst other things, for the payment at the rate of two shillings to the rupee of pensions payable in England and the Colonies, be adopted by this meeting, as accurately representing the case of the service."

THE fourth resolution was proposed by Mr. C. H. Reynolds, and seconded by Dr. G. Watt:—"That the memorial and signatures be transmitted to Mr. Henry S.

King, M.P., for submission to the House of Commons, and that a copy of these resolutions be also transmitted to that gentleman."

CONTRARY to expectations a Birthday Honours list was published on Saturday, June 2nd.

THE Finance Committee's report has at length been issued, and suggestions are made which, if carried out, will result in a large saving to the State.

THE reports on the wheat crop in various districts have just been published. On the whole the harvest seems likely to be fairly good.

TENDERS for a new four per cent. loan of three hundred lakhs of rupees have been asked for by the Government of India.

SIX HUNDRED AND FORTY dacoits have surrendered in the Minbu district.

THE Tibetans are concentrating in some force in the Kupup valley, quite close to our headquarters at Gnatong. It is supposed they mean to try another assault upon Colonel Graham's position.

THE telegraph has been laid to Gnatong.

THE question of utilising the offers made by the Punjab Chiefs towards the defence of India is now awaiting the Lieutenant-Governor's opinion before the Government of India will take any action.

THE Maharana of Oodeypore has offered six lakhs to Government for the defence of the North-West Frontier, together with the services of his troops should occasion arise.

ABDUL Huq has replied to the questions which were recently put to him by the Nizam's Government. He states that the object of granting the mining concession was to obtain favourable terms for the railway scheme. He asserts it was never intended to limit the issue of shares to the first issue, and that the final draft of the agreement was in accordance with the wishes and instructions of both the Indian and Hyderabad Government. He admits his fourth share in the concession, and says that he sold his own shares to the latter Government last year as no others were available in the market.

ABDUL HUQ has taken back the 12,500 shares he sold to the Nizam's Government last year, and repays £151,631.

THE Native Infantry of the 1st Army Corps are, it is said, to be armed with the Martini-Henry immediately.

THE Government of India have decided not to abolish the Calcutta Mint.

THE Bangalore Fort is about to be transferred to Mysore.

THE work of the Committee on the Railway Bill is nearly completed.

THE whole question of the labour laws as affecting coolie emigration into Assam is likely to be reviewed by the Government of India.

THE Dowager Maharani of Burdwan has offered a donaltion of Rs. 5,000 towards the establishment of a school in Burdwan for European and Native girls, to be called Lady Bayley's Free Girls' School.

OBITUARY.—Mr. C. K. Lyon, Bengal Civil Service; Colonel E. W. Chester, late Bengal Staff Corps, at Dehra Dun.

THE appointment of an Inspector-General of Army Signaling in the Bengal Presidency has been sanctioned. The officer holding the post will be ranked as Deputy Assistant Quartermaster-General.

NOTES.

THE most important news from India to-day is that contained in the telegrams of the Times correspondent at Calcutta regarding the position of affairs at Sikkim. A new act of aggression on the part of the Thibetans will, of course, be very effectually met by our own troops, whose withdrawal from the unhealthy frontier station appears to have given encouragement to the raiders. Another attack on Gnatong is certain to be repulsed with considerable loss to the enemy, and the lesson which will then be given will not be without excellent effect on the Thibetans.

But the Times correspondent hints that we are going to invade Thibet ourselves by way of reprisal, and upon this information the Times of this morning devotes a leader conveying warnings and suggestions. "If there is any thought of a counter attack on Thibet, we must insist that the buisness is not one to be undertaken with a light heart, or without the most absolute necessity, or without the full concurrence of the Home Government." Certainly not; but where did the correspondent get his information from? Is it likely that the Government of India would give sanction to a movement which might embroil us in a war with China, and the Parliament and people of England know nothing of the fact? The idea is ridiculous.

But the Times takes the matter very seriously. It diseusses the possibility of a march on Lhassa. This, it says, "might be in the nature of a military parade, but it would be conducted over difficult ground, and to a very distant distant objective. It might be a lesson to the Tibetans, but it would be a lesson also to ourselves; and we are not sure that, when the totals came to be added up, the advantage, after all, would be found to rest with the invaders. There is the chance, too, of embroiling ourselves with China—a country which we touch at more points than one, and with which it is our interest to maintain our present friendly relations." As the Times itself allows that As the Times itself allows that the decision regarding an advance into Thibet territory must rest not with Calcutta, but with London, it may cause some readers to inquire why these platitudes about the inconvenience of a war with China should have been written.

It is just possible that the military feeling in India is in favour of such an advance, but the Pioneer to hand by the present mail says that the instructions given to Colonel Graham at Gnatong were to stick to his redoubts until he was attacked, and then to give the enemy as sharp a lesson as he could. "Colonel Graham," the same authority goes on to state, "is naturally eager to follow up the assailants, feeling himself able, with the 1,500 men at his disposal, to go almost anywhere, even to the heart of Thibet. moment he moves any distance from his base comes in the costly question of transport and supplies; whilst the possibility of serious complications with China, should Lhassa be threatened, is not to be lightly encountered." We should think not. The Times almost repeats the Pioneer's words, but the readers of both journals need be under no anxiety. England is not likely to embark on another China war.

But another frontier expedition is impending. The murder of two such gallant and popular officers as Colonel Battye and Captain Urmston necessitates the putting down with a strong hand the aggressive mountain tribe which has been for years a continual source of trouble on our frontier. It is sad indeed to have to record the loss of two British officers and six gallant Goorkhas at the hands of the savage ruffians who infest the neighbourhood of the Black Mountain; but to punish the tribe effectually will not be, as the Times thinks, "a mere matter of police"—a capable punitive expedition must be sent to bring the wild men to their senses, and to exact retribution for the murders they have committed.

OF course there will be a howl from certain quarters here against what will be designated as "another of England's little wars," but it is not likely that the sentimentalists will be able to prevent the punitive expedition, which will probably commence to move as soon as the cold weather sets in. The Standard, we are glad to see, puts the matter very clearly and to the point in a leader written on receipt of the news of the attack on our reconnoitering party:-"The murder of two English officers, one Native officer, and five Sepoys calls for some marked retaliation en our side. Colonel Battye was not only himself a distinguished and gallant officer, but a member of a heroic family, which lost in the service of its country one brother before Delhi, and another in the last Afghan War. It is not to be supposed that the Government of India can remain for a moment indifferent to his fate and that of his comrade in arms, and of the brave men who followed them to death, or that the measures taken to punish these enemies of our authority will not be both prompt and effectual. Much as we may dislike being drawn into the recesses of the Afghan hills, we are compelled by honour and interest alike to resort in such cases as the present to vigorous measures of reprisal, and to force home the conviction on all the turbulent tribes on our border that if they assail the representatives of our authority they will be called to a swift and stern account for the crime.

THE cry of the Uncovenanted still continues to be raised in India, and from the resolutions which have been passed at the meeting at Simla it is evident that the members of that service do not intend that the complaint of their wrongs and grievances shall be lost on empty air. It is all very well for the House of Commons to decline to entertain such complaint, but unless some attempt at remedying it be made the very unedifying spectacle will continue of the Paramount Power trying to govern India through a large class of discontented servants who are declaring to the world that they are being unfairly and cruelly treated by their masters. The Government may not feel inclined to allow the payment of uncovenanted service pensions at the fixed rate of exchange demanded, but it is certain that some modification of the present rules must be made and some compromise come to with the large and influential body of hard-working officials who have done in the past, and are still doing, the State much good

INDIA.

CALCUTTA, JUNE 24.

We are unfortunately likely to be involved in another small frontier war. Colonel Battye, of the 5th Goorkhas, Captain Urmston, of the 6th Punjab Infantry, one havildar, end five Goorkha Sepoys have been killed at Cherkalan, on the Agror border, by a body of Akoza's, a Black Mountain tribe. Colonel Battye had with him fifty-eight Goorkhas and nineteen policemen, with whom he had ascended the Barcha Spur for exercise, and while attempting to return by way of Chillabal and Kunjal, just within our border, a havildar with the rearguard was shot by some mountaineers. Colonel Battye and Captain Urmston went to his assistance, and while the officers were placing the havildar in a dandy they were attacked in force and placing the havildar in a dandy they were attacked in force and killed. The main body of the Goorkhas attacked the tribesmen and repulsed them, and succeeded in bringing in the

The Akozais have been under blockade for some time for The Akozais have been under blockade for some time for various offences committed on British territory. The Oghi outpost, near which the attack was made, was held by 300 men of the 5th Goorkhas. The Agror valley lies to the north of Abbottabad, near the Black Mountain. These tribes are a source of constant trouble. It has been proposed for some time past to send a punitive expedition to bring them to reason. The Government of India thought a simple blockade sufficient. This attack however has proport matters to a crisic. A force This attack, however, has prought matters to a crisis. A force will be despatched against the tribes, but probably not before next October. Colonel Battye commanded at Oghi. This out post has been reinforced by 250 infantrymen, and a squadron of guides will probably be also sent to strengthen the garrison. General M'Queen reports from Abbottabad that all is quiet. Communication between Abbottabad and Agror is slow and difficult, and full details of the disaster have therefore not yet been received.

A large meeting of European and Native admirers of the late Sir Frank Souter has been held at the Petit Hall, Malabar Hill, to consider what steps should be taken to perpetuate his memory.

It was resolved to raise a memorial fund, and 10,000 rupees were subscribed in the room. Colonel Wilson has been appointed to succeed Sir F. Souter.

A private of the 2nd Grenadiers has shot a havildar in charge of the quarter-guard at Poona. The assassin was sentry over the treasure chest. He absconded with a rifle and nineteen cartridges, but was eventually arrested by the head constable, with his rifle loaded and at full cock.

A shocking case of human sacrifice is reported from the Central Provinces, near Nagpore. A boy of sixteen was offered in sacrifice to the gods, in accordance with a superstition that human sacrifices caused a bountiful harvest. The boy's head was severed from the body, and offered to a goddess, while the trunk of the body was offered to a god. The case is under investigation by the police, and fears are expressed that this horrible custom is prevalent in the Central Provinces.

As in the case of the North-West Provinces and Oude, the wheat harvest in the Punjab of the season just past has given an excellent yield. The increase over the area of the preceding year was 4 per cent., while the yield, reaching the enormous total of 33,370,139cwt., rose 22'5 per cent. if we compare it with the estimate of 1886-87, and nearly 10 per cent. if we take the revised estimate. In that year the average yield was 9½ bushels per acre. This was obtained in a season in which the total rainfall was considerably below the average. The explanation is the seasonable distribution of the rainfall, which was even greater than in the North-West Provinces. The increased yield will be absorbed for the most part in replenishing stocks, which in only two districts are reported "good," while in four they are "fair," in six "small," and in seventeen "very small."

In connection with the Hyderabad mining scandals a conspiracy to bribe officials and purchase telegraphic information has been detected at Secunderabad. One of the defendants is stated to be related to Abdul Huq. Various arrests have been made.

SIKKIM AND TIBET.

CALCUTTA, JUNE 24.

The withdrawal of the European troops from Sikkim prior to the conclusion of peace has apparently been construed by the Tibetans as evidence of timidity, and has therefore encouraged the Lamas to adopt active measures for resuming offensive operations with a view to drive our garrison out of Sikkim. We have just received important telegraphic news, despatched from Gnatong, stating that preparations are being pushed forward at the Jalapla Pass for another attack on Chatong. Five graphs and professional forwards of the contract o Gnatong. Five guns and reinforcements of Tibetan soldiers have already assembled at Jalapla. In consequence of their hostile preparations, the last half-company of the Sherwood Foresters (Derbyshire Regiment), which left Gnatong on Wednesday, has been ordered back.

LATER.

The following telegram has just been received from

"On account of the report of an impending attack on Gnatong the two guns of the Royal Artillery have been halted here, and the movement of the Sherwood Foresters (Derbyshire Regiment) is postponed. If the report prove baseless the troops will be marched on to Darjeeling.

"Colonel Graham leaves here for Gnatong. The telegraph will be extended to Pahyong immediately. A political officer is here from Darjeeling. The political officer attached to the Intehi column is at Keulaka superintending the work of roadmaking, which is being rapidly pushed forward in order to secure every facility for the forwarding of supplies."

THE MURDER OF MR. DALGLEISH.

CALCUTTA, June 24.

The Government of India has telegraphed a description of the murderers of Mr. Dalgleish to Pekin, Teleran, and Russia, and has also written to Yarkand and Kashgar on the subject. Rewards of Rs. 5,000 for the capture of Dad Mohammed, and Rs. 3,000 for his principal accomplice, the Panjabi Fakir Buksh, have been offered, and there is a reasonable prospect of shortly capturing Dad Mohammed.

BURMA.

RANGOON, JUNE 24

As already announced, the Chief Commissioner, by a minute published in the last Gazette, has materially modified the disarmament policy and removed its more objectionable features. Henceforward disarmament will be neither rigidly nor uniformly enforced, and the Karens and Burman villagers whose loyalty is ascertained will be allowed to retain their arms. Much wider powers are given to the district officers in the matter of granting licences to carry arms to persons residing in their districts. This change of policy is believed to be due to instructions sent by the Government of India.

There has been a good deal of cholers in Mandalay and the

There has been a good deal of cholera in Mandalay, and the Chief Commissioner has consequently delayed his departure

Chief Commissioner has consequently delayed his departure to Upper Burma.

No further news has been received of the late Chin raid, as the telegraph to the district is interrupted.

The last official bulletin shows that on the whole there had been a decrease in the disturbances in Upper Burma. Up to the 5th inst. everything was quiet at Mogoung. The Shwebo and Tsagain districts continue to be troubled by dacoits, and in the latter district a loyal Thoogyee and his son have been murdered by dacoits. In several districts the villagers have successfully resisted small bands of dacoits. In Myingyan fifteen dacoits with five guns attacked a village, but were driven off by the villagers. In Pagan the dacoits attacked the police station. The usual series of petty skirmishes between the police and dacoits in various districts is recorded, and in these affairs the military police were uniformly successful. The these affairs the military police were uniformly successful. The Pyinmana district in the eastern division is greatly disturbed by small dacoit bands, who carry off elephants and cattle and do much damage in the large forests, which in this district are worked by the Bombay and Burma Corporation. Thus the foresters have to work under the protection of a guard of 300 armed Karens.

A body of forty-two military police going to Mogound to reinforce the garrison were attacked by Kachyens, but the assailants were repulsed. Old Setgan, otherwise known as Tagong, has been attacked and looted by fifty Shan dacoits, who subsequently retreated to the Shweli River.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

DELHI REVISITED AFTER THIRTY YEARS.

Thirty years have elapsed since I left Delhi. What ages seemed to have passed since then! what years of care, love, and loss! As I stand by the old dome near the church, the past, in one flash of self-consciousness, rushes back. Looking back over the gulf of time, I think of the morning when the trivial monotony of Indian life was interrupted by the startling intelligence that the Native troops at Meerut had mutinied and murdered the Europeans, and were entering Delhi. The husband goes to defend his post; the wife and three daughters soon hear firing all round, and the servants tell them that the city rabble are murdering men, women and children. They fly to the next house (now the Imperial Hotel) where some friends reside. All belong to their own sex; one is a mother with a young child. They now see the rabble brandishing their swords rush into the house they had just left. The next house they will visit must be the one to which they have come for shelter. The five ladies hide in a dark cellar. Soon they hear the tramp of feet, and then the breaking of furniture and the crash of chandeliers. They also hear the rabble asking one another where the women could have gone, and relating the deeds of violence they had done that day. Then all was silent. They began to think that the danger had passed away when they see two men standing at the door with naked swords. The mother puts forward her infant and begs for life. The appeal is successful. The women steal from their hiding-place and hurry to the Main Guard at the Cashmere Gate. Here are soldiers, and they will be safe. They are placed on gun carriages to be taken to the cantonments. No sooner are the gates opened than the signal (Times of India.) be safe. They are placed on gun carriages to be taken to the cantonments. No sooner are the gates opened than the signal is given, and the massacre of the officers by their own men commences. Then women and children run up the slope which leads to the ramparts. A murderous volley lays low many. The mother is wounded through the shoulder and falls, but stalwart arms carry her to the top. Then a column of smoke rises to the sky, and the earth trembles, and a loud roar is heard. It is the explosion of the Delhi Magazine. Terror-stricken, the sepoys leave their prey to see what has taken place. Then the officers take off their sword-belts, and make with them a rope to lower the ladies. The belts give way at the first person, and the ladies and children have to be dropped over the parapet. I walk up the slope and look over the dizzy height and wonder how any of them escaped alive. Then I think of the mother and little girl, how they roamed for a week over rough fields, from village to village, in the burning month of May, till they reached Meerut. Not one word did the child utter during that time. Far from the barren plains of Delhi my thoughts wander to a country churchyard at home, where mother and daughter are at rest.

I pass through the Cashmere Gate and stop to read the inscription on the simple tablet which Lord Magdala has erected to the gallant men who sacrificed their lives in blowing up the gate the day the guilty city was stormed. The history of the Mutiny abounds with examples of heroic deeds wrought by Englishmen; it also abounds with examples of self-sacrifice displayed by sepoys for their officers. From the Cashmere Gate we proceeded to the old cemetery which stands by the road, and is surrounded by fine old trees. The inside is bright with budding flowers and roses. Near the entrance is the grave of John Nicholson. The tomb is a plain substantial one, and the inscription is answerable to the monument. It informs us that he "led the assault of Delhi, but fell in the hour of victory mortally wounded, and died 23rd September, 1857, aged 35 years." Of the heroes who have made the Indian Mutiny an epic, none strike the imagination like John Nicholson. He is a noble knight belonging to the time of King Arthur rather than the prosaic nineteenth century. Tall of person and majestic presence, he well justified his title of Lion of the Punjab. Strong and brave, he had the high moral grace which makes bravery and strength beautiful. From the cemetery we walked to Ludlow Castle, a large house where, in the early days of the siege, the rebels had established themselves and planted a battery from which they contrived greatly to harass our picquets. . . . After leaving Ludlow Castle we drove along a road lined with fine trees till we reached the top of the historic ridge. Deserting the carriage we walked to the old cantonment cemetery, where the majority of those who fell during the siege are buried. Of all desolate sights this is the most desolate. A few stunted trees stand within the enclosure, and every yard of ground is a raised mound covered with dried yellow grass. Interspersed among the mounds are a few substantial forms. But this barren spot is full of soul-stirring associations. It is the spirit that lives and makes al

Leaving the cemetery we retraced our steps till we reached the Flag Staff Tower, which was one of the four great posts on the Ridge during the siege. When the besieging force reached it, a cartload of bodies was found inside, supposed to be those of the officers massacred on May 11th. Near the tower is a tomb, with a tablet to the memory of Captain Smith, Lieutenant Edwards, and Lieutenant Waterfield, who fell at the head of their regiment on the day the Mutiny arose. A decent railing might be put around the tomb, and it should be kept in better repair. Further on to the right of the tower is a ruined mosque of the old Pathan type, which afforded shelter and accommodation to the besiegers. Here we found the remains of a battery. Passing the old Observatory built by the great Rajpoot astronomer, we come to Hindu Rao's house, built by a Mahratta nobleman who was in the old days famous for his hospitality. Our troops found it deserted, and here through weeks and months of incessant fighting the gallant Reid held his own with a handful of riflemen and his regiment of Goorkhas. To relate the deeds of valour and self-sacrifice performed on the ridge at Delhi requires an epic and the genius of the great blind poet of war. It would contain no mythic tale like the Iliad, but a plain narrative of facts which would rival legend in interest and grandeur. It would narrate how in the brief space of six weeks a small force fought more than twenty well-contested battles against a vast host. Neither heat, nor rain, nor pestilence destroyed their courage—nor crushed their spirits. In the mess tent they made merry, and like the Greeks before Troy, they had their sports stricken to death; the soldier told his officer he would soon be up again and be ready for a brush with the mutineers. All were animated and sustained by the same spirit—the stern spirit of revenge for men and women slaughtered. A few yards from Hindu Rao's is the memorial of that great siege and the heroes mortal strife for Empire which took place in that valley only a quarter of a century ago. The memory of the strife does but add a calm to the fair scene that lies before us.

Quitting with regret our point of vantage, we descend the Ridge and return through the Cashmere Gate to the city. Passing by the church we reach an archway supported by two towers. This is the old gate which led to the Delhi Arsenal. How well I remember driving through it thirty years ago and the boyish delight at the sight of all the guns and munitions of war. On a tablet above the archway are inscribed the names of the nine valiant resolute men who have won for themselves a high place in the splendid bead roll of Englishmens. Deserted by all their dependents, these nine Englishmen kept at bay a multitude of trained and disciplined men. "As the enemy streamed over the walls, round after round of murderous grape-shot from our guns, delivered with all the coolness and steadiness of a practice parade, riddled the advancing multitudes; but still they poured on, keeping up a heavy fire of musketry from the walls. Yet hoping almost against hope to hear the longed-for sound of the coming help from Mcerut, the devoted Englishmen held their ground until their available ammunition was expended. Then further defence was impossible; they could not leave the guns to bring up shot from the Magazine, and there were none to help them. Meanwhile the mutineers were forcing their way at other unprotected points into the great enclosure, and it was plain that the nine—two among them wounded, though not disabled, for the strong will kept them at their posts—could no longer hold the great store house from the grasp of the enemy. So the signal was given. Conductor Scully fired the train. In a few seconds there was a tremendous explosion. The Magazine had been blown into the air." The three hundred Spartans, who in the summer morning state "combing their long hair for death" in the passes of Thermopyle, have not earned a more lofty estimate for themselves than t

A KNOWLEDGE OF THE WANTS OF INDIA. (Madras Mail.)

The pretensions of the organizers of the Indian National Congress movement have been severely handled in the columns of the Pioneer by Mr. Theodore Beck, the Principal of the Mahomedan Anglo-Oriental College at Aligarh, the chief town of a District of the same name in the North-West Provinces, which has an area of nearly 2,000 square miles, and a population exceeding one million. The town has a population of about 60,000, including 23,000 Mahomedans, a very large number of whom sympathise with the strong disapproval of the Congress which has been pronounced, and emphatically reiterated by their fellow-citizen, Sir Syud Ahmed Khan, K.C.S.I. It would serve no useful purpose at this date to subject Mr. Beck's criticisms of the Congress to much scrutiny. The Congress movement is not going to be snuffed out to oblige its censors; and paper, ink, and time are not profitably employed in the attempt to prove, first, that the Hindu of the period will, if right-minded, see that he has nothing to complain of, and then that the Congress is mischievous in its aims, and may be ruinous in its results. Mr. Beck, and other shrewd observers in the North of his own present way of thinking, will have an opportunity next December of attending the Congress meeting at Allahabad, and acquainting themselves with the way in which the proceedings are conducted, and the manner in which the speakers give expression to what they take to be the wishes and wants of their countrymen. Meanwhile his animadversions will break no bones, and his predictions may fall decidedly flat. He, however, brings his reflections to a conclusion that seems to us to possess a far higher value than all the laboured pessimism which precedes it.

He points out that what he calls "favours" cannot be given "unless we know the wants of the people." With his idea that "it is the part of the Indian Government to show favours from time to time as she can without danger to the stability of her rule; such acts as a loving father would do for his sons," we do not concur. The India of to-day cannot be treated as a child by the Government, and kept in good humour by the periodical distribution, at the discretion of that heavy parent, of political lollipops. "She should dispense her favours royally; her gifts should emanate from her own Imperial pleasure; there should be no kind of appearance that they have been extorted from her; nor should they smack of stinginess or meanness." But when the traveller at the inn asked the waiter—as recorded in the veracious pages of Punch—"What is the smallest sum that I can you give without being considered mean?" he acted as the Government of India or any other country would act if it were left to it to make political boons spontaneously. The Congressionists do not adopt an aggressive attitude; but with studied courtesy that says it will be good both for you, the Paramount Power, and for us the would be recipients, if more scope is given for the exercise of our talents, and more opportunity is allowed for our becoming self-helpful, and self-containing. They do not ask for this enlarged scope as a favour, but they ask for it as a right of educated manhood that is putting away childish things, and is putting into practice the lessons it has been taught. The Congressionists feel that they should make it their special business to enlighten the Government as to the country's wants; but Mr. Beck considers that the Government should not need any nformation on this point if its own servants did their duty, and kept it well acquainted with current public requirements. He forgets, however, that the members of the Government in any Presidency are, as a rule, little disposed to accept anything in the nature of instruction from inferior official beings; and that if any of the latter do venture to offer to them the similitude of advice they must wrap it up so dexterously that the extreme self-consciousness of the recipients may not be wounded by the profane suggestion that there is something that they do not know. We do not blame the minnows for not attempting to teach the whales. The whales live in a serene atmosphere of adulation in what seems to them to be an extremely well-arranged world, and they are not troubled with hints by minnows who wish to climb the official ladder. Unfortunately it is peculiarly true of the whales that they "live apart from the natives" in a "comfortable way," without "bother and inconvenience." They love the Natives—at a distance, or the distance of the Hills from the plains; and instead of living among the people who have to be understood rightly in order to

How can the members of the several Governments gain or retain the "full confidence of the people", how can they become or remain "minutely conversant with their ways of thought," so long as they desert the plains on the miserably unmanly plea that persons of their quality cannot be reasonably expected to work in a temperature that their predecessors endured, and that is compatible with the performance of high-class intellectual work by the longest-lived class of foreign officials in the land—the Judges of High Courts? All will agree with Mr. Beck that every Englishman "who comes out must do so on the distinct understanding that he must must live among the people, and make himself so much of an Oriental that by the vibration of his own feelings he can say how the measures of Government will affect his fellow-men." But a good example must be set by that Government, instead of the pernicious example that is in fashion. "The men who built up our Empire did this, but nowadays a man who tries to do it is looked on by a large number of his countrymen as a contemptible madman." True; but those are mad who will not see that the present system of "insularity" and isolation is fatal to that sympathy—that plant of slow growth—which formerly existed between the Natives and their foreign rulers. The day must come when Parliament will no longer tolerate a system that allows Governments in India to live away from the people. The subject has received but listless attention in Parliament hitherto, as it has been regarded as a mere administrative detail which members should not interfere with. But this cannot always be so, and Parliament will some day share Lord Napier's opinions of the evil of absenteeism in India. "While withdrawn from the plains the Governor is sequestered, from almost all the objects, and almost all the scenes of philanthropic, social, and historical interests; he is sequestered from the labouring and suffering millions who have so deep a clain on his duty and solicitude"; and he "will be considered by the in

ENGLISH CHARITIES AND INDIAN PRINCES. (Times of India.)

The cool assumption of an English charitable society in sending out to the Viceroy a bundle of circulars begging for contributions with the request that the Government of India should distribute them among the Native Princes has been very properly snubbed. The Native Princes seem to be considered fair game for philanthropists and adventurers alike. If the Princes are to be inveigled into subscribing to the funds of every charitable Soup-kitchen or Dorcas Society in England they will be as surely ruined by the lambs of society as by the wolves in lamb's clothing. We use the word "inveigled" deliberately, for however praiseworthy be the object of this particular Society which has drawn forth the Viceroy's righteous rebuke, it was unquestionably a piece of sharp practice to endeavour to have its begging card hall-marked by the authority it would have derived from being forwarded by the Indian Government. As the Viceroy truly points out, this would have been to bring illegitimate influence to bear upon the Native Chiefs. The latter almost invariably construe a Government request, even though indirectly preferred, as an order; and in a recent case we have had a flagrant example of a purely private letter from an august Royal personage being produced at the Court of a Native State, and used—successfully used—as a means of bringing pressure to bear towards enforcing a claim which, on its inherent merits, was very dubious indeed. This is little short of a public scandal; and the sconer begging letterwriters, whether their motives be altruistic or egoistic, be warned off the field of Native States the better. There are too many Montagu Tiggs with their Anglo-Bengalee Disinterested Loan and Life Insurance enterprises on the group interested Loan and Life Insurance enterprises on the group interested Loan and Life Insurance enterprises on the concluding sentence from Lord Dufferin's reference to the subject, and commend the words of sound common-sense to all charity-exploiters at home:—"The Governor-General is of opinion that, in presence of the many claims upon them in their own country, the Princes of India ought not to be solicited to contribute to English charities with which neither they no

THE TELEGRAPH DEPARTMENT.

(Pioneer.)

Why is it that when the grievances of the Telegraph Department are concerned the Government of India is chronically incapable of getting beyond a policy of tinker? When the hardship of blocked promotion became too apparent to be any longer ignored a great show of concession was made by framing rules to facilitate retirement, but the remedy was presently found to be so much worse than the disease that no one could take advantage of it; and now, when the injustice and unreasonableness of the rules regulating permanent and officiating promotions have attracted public attention the Government attempts to stay criticism by a half-hearted compromise, which at the best will satisfy some officers only by irritating others. It will be remembered that by the Resolution of last October permanent promotions were to be made only twice a year, on the 1st of April and 1st October, the effect of this being that a man promoted, say on April 2nd, does not receive the extra pay due until October 1st. Government, however, has now issued a circular stating that any substantive promotion involving a change of duties must necessarily take place with effect from the date of vacancy, while all other substantive promotions are to take effect from the beginning of each half-year. A more senseless distinction was never invented to defend a stupid rule. The claim to increase of pay either is or is not properly founded on a change of duties. If it is, then in cases where no such change has taken place, the increase of pay should be withheld not only for the months that elapse until the half-year is up, but altogether; if it is not, then to keep back several months' pay as if it were, is sheer robbery. To work on one principle for a few months, and on another for the remainder of the time during which an appointment is held, is as illogical as it is unfair. The practical result is that in the case of twenty-nine of the senior offices of the department, promotion to which is held to involve change of duties, the officers promoted will get pai

THERE is a steady increase in the number of British troops of the Bengal Presidency who are sent to the hills for the hot season. From 1870 till 1885 the number varied from 5,196 to 9,630, but in 1886 it went up to 11,908, and in the two subsequent years it has advanced to 13,701 and 14,980, respectively.

This season the men are distributed as follows:—2,244 in hill depôts, 5,005 in regular hill stations. and 7,731 in summer camps. There are also 588 women and 1,379 children on the attached list, while 1,389 of the men belong to the Madras Army.

Mr. DUFF Bruce's proposal for a permanent bridge across the Hooghly to replace the floating bridge not having been taken up by the Port Commissioners, he is bringing forward a project for a tunnel connecting the East Indian Railway at Howrah with the docks. The project is favourably entertained by the directors of the railway, and Mr. Bruce is working it out in conjunction with Mr. Greathead, Engineer to the Subway at present being constructed under the Thames. Mr. Greathead has a patent process for constructing tunnels through alluvial strata, which enables the work to be prosecuted with great economy and certainty. The proposed tunnel will be about 4,400 feet long, and is estimated to cost about £140,000.

A PUBLIC meeting has been held in Calcutta in support of a memorial to the Viceroy, praying for the restoration of certain endowments of Hindoo temples at Benares alleged to have been confiscated during the Mutiny. It may be useful (says the Times of India) to those who took part in the meeting and others interested in the question to know the real facts of the case, which bears a very different aspect from that presented by Captain Hearsay. The alleged endowment consists of certain Government notes which Venayek Rao of Kirwee is stated to have allotted for the support of certain temples at Benares. These notes are now said to have been wrongfully confiscated by Government along with other property of the well-known Madho Rao of Kirwee at the time of the Mutiny. Now, as a matter of fact, Venayek Rao made no such endowment. The Government securities referred to in this case were paid off to him in 1853, the loan of which they formed part having then become due. Venayek Rao's will was filed in the High Court, and a reference to it will show that it contains no such clauses as those which have been put forward in support of this claim. There are many minor errors in the various statements which have been made on behalf of the claim, as, for example, in the value of the Government securities; but we need not waste time in pointing them out. The whole claim is based on a myth. Those who are responsible for this attempt to get up an Hindoo agitation on the subject should have taken the trouble to be first sure of their facts.

MADRAS.

THE road from the foot of the hills to Naini Tal seems specially fatal to Tonga ponies. At the late meeting in London of the Rohilkund and Kumaon Company's shareholders, General Trevor stated that, up to date, the Company had lost Rs.14,000 by the service, chiefly from fatalities among the cattle, pneumonia being the prevailing epidemic. If this goes on the Company will, it was stated, have to stop the service altogether.

ME. AT Ootacamund, on May 28, Lord Connemara opened the Adam Memorial Fountain, erected at a cost of Rs. 17,000, to the memory of the late Mr. Adam, Governor of Madras. The fountain was cast in Leeds, and is a fac-simile of the one in that town. The members of council, the leading officials, and many of the sojourners at Ooty were present.

THE Government of India has passed orders for transferring Bangalore Fort to the Mysore Durbar. At the time of the rendition of Mysore the fort contained an arsenal, and was occupied by British troops, and it was in consequence retained within the limits of British jurisdiction. But the stores having been removed, and the troops withdrawn, the fort is no longer wanted, and it has been delivered over to the Maharaja. Opportunity has been taken at the same time to effect another rectification of boundary by bringing the Residency house and ground, which have been hitherto outside the British pale, within it.

The following is the summary of the Bombay Presidency Season reports for the past week:—Rain in parts of Shikarpur, Nasik, Rutnagherry, Poona, Ahmednugger, Sholapur, Bijapur, Belgaum, Dharwar, and Kanara. Cotton-packing still uncompleted in Kaira. Harvesting of late crops continues in Kurrachee and Hyderabad. Ploughing for next season completed in Kolaba, Poona, and Wadhwan; progressing elsewhere. Fodder scarce in parts of Tanna, Rutnagherry, Dharwar, and Kattywar.

Mr. Hall, now Secretary to the Deccan Mining Company, was, according to an up-country paper, originally a partner in the once well-known firm of Nicol and Co., whose sudden burst-up some years ago produced considerable excitement in Bombay. Mr. Hall was respected and popular, and as a junior partner in the concern, and a severe loser by the collapse, was generally held guiltless of all complicity in certain transactions for which the firm was severely censured at the time.

MR. COWASJEE PALLONJEE CHAVNA and other members of his family have subscribed among themselves Rs.23,260 to perpetuate the memory of their relation, Mr. Dadabhai Pallonjee Chavna, who died on the 24th May. The amount will be distributed amongst the several Parsee charitable institutions, including the Jamsetjee Nusserwanjee Petit Parsee Orphanage, the Parsee Lying-in Hospital, libraries, fire-temples, and such other institutions.

SERGEANT EVANS, of the Seaforth Highlanders, had a narrow escape from drowning at Naini Tal on the Queen's Birthday. It seems that he and a number of other sergeants, among them being Sergeant Bradford of the same regiment, went in for a swim in the lake. Evans got entangled in weeds which bound his hands and feet, and left him utterly powerless to help himself. Bradford saw his friend's danger, and without for a moment giving thought to the risk he ran, dived down and after considerable trouble rescued him. Evans was quite unconscious. Bradford's act was the more meritorious seeing that when he discovered his friend's peril and went to his assistance he was himself nearly exhausted with swimming about.

FRANCO-CHINESE TREATY.

M. Dureau de Vaulcomte, the deputy of Réunion, has read the report to the Commission of the Chamber charged to examine the commercial treaty between France and China. It will be remembered that after the close of the conquest of Tong-King, two treaties of commerce were signed between France and China—• 10 on April 25, 1886, concluded by M. Copordan and the complementary treaty of June 26, 1887, concluded by M. Constans. These two treaties have been submitted for the ratification of the French Chambers. At the same time the reporter rendered an account of the convention between France and China for the delimitation of the frontiers of Tong-King. The report is very long, and contains a complete expose of the commercial situation of France in the Far East, and concludes by recommending the ratification of the conventions. The Commission has approved the report. The treaties have been ratified by the Chinese, and can, therefore, be immediately put in force.

India in Parliament.

THE CASE OF MR. WILLIAM TAYLER.

Sir Roper Letheride called attention to the case of Mr. William Tayler, late Commissioner at Patna, and expressed a hope that the House would not turn a deaf ear to a case of individual wrong simply because it was a thing that had occurred long ago. Mr. Tayler was now eighty-one years of age, and his wrongs had their origin thirty-one years ago, during the Irdian Mutiny. When the mutiny broke out the opinions of Mr. Tayler and those of Sir F. K. Halliday, the Governor of Bengal, were diametrically opposite. The Governor would not believe that there was any danger at Patna, and Mr. Tayler was dismissed from his position at Patna, and became a ruined man. One of the principal charges against Mr. Tayler was that he had been unduly severe upon the fanatics of Patna; but some of them were in 1865 tried by Sir Herbert Edwardes for treason, and one of them, who had been particularly described as an inuocent man, was sentenced to death. Sir Herbert Edwardes afterwards bore testimony that Mr. Tayler had, by seizing the leaders when they could and would have struck a heavy blow against us, prevented disaster. Sir Bartle Frere also said what Mr. Tayler had done had saved the province from insurrection. These two gentlemen were members of Lord Canning's Government when Mr. Tayler was condemned: and when they came really to know the facts they retracted their opinion. The hon, member also quoted what had been written, in a similar spirit, by Sir John Kaye, Dr. Alexander Duff, the head of the Scotch missionaries in Bengal, and by various other persons holding different positions in India. He moved. "That, in the opinion of this House. Sir ROPER LETHBRIDGE called attention to the case of Mr. in Bengal, and by various other persons holding different positions in India. He moved, "That, in the opinion of this House, it is desirable, with a view to the settlement of a longstand-controversy as to the wrong stated to have been suffered by a meritorious servant of the Crown, that a select committee should be appointed to inquire into this case."

Sir H. HAVELOCK-ALLAN seconded the motion, complaining should be appointed to inquire into this case."

Sir H. HAVELOCK-ALLAN seconded the motion, complaining that no investigation whatever had been held in reference to this particular case. His opinion was that the city of Patna and the surrounding province were saved by the wise, bold, and determined action of Mr. Tayler.

Sir. J. Gorst said the Secretary of State for India was as anxious to do justice to anyone who was suffering under undeserved obloquy as the hor, members who had spoken or any other gentleman in the House, but before the House embarked upon an investigation by a select committee, he thought that the plain unvarnished facts ought to be placed before it. The real grievance had been greatly exaggerated. Mr. Tayler was not dismissed from the public service in consequence of the Patna business in 1857; he was simply superseded in the position he held at Patna and transferred to another, and if it had not been for subsequent events he might have continued to serve the Crown. The hon, and learned gentleman proceeded to quote cases with a view of showing that, in consequence of Mr. Tayler's action, men had been executed on evidence as to the sufficiency of which there was the gravest doubt, and said that Lord Canning at the time had offered Mr. Tayler a public inquiry into the charges made against him, which he declined on the ground that he was shortly about to retire, and it was a strange thing that, after thirty years, it should be now asked for. (Hear, hear.) In the face of what had been said about this case never having been properly considered, he must in common justice tell the House what an extraordinary amount of consideration this case had face of what had been said about this case never having been properly considered, he must in common justice tell the House what an extraordinary amount of consideration this case had received. An hon, member had almost moved him to tears, official as he was—(laughter)—by his description of the condition to which the negligence of the India Office had reduced this unfortunate man. But he had suffered no harm at all, and he pledged his word to that House, from the memoranda which he had examined, that this case had been considered on its merits again and again. (Cheers.)

Mr. Labouchere said he knew nothing personally about Mr. Tayler but he was convinced by correspondence that he had

Tayler, but he was convinced by correspondence that he had had concerning that gentleman that a substantial injustice had been done him. (Hear, hear.) Mr. J. M. Maclean thought the case ought not to be reopened.

Mr. Jeffreys supported the motion.

Mr. W. H. Smith saw no reason whatever for reopening the question. It was for the House to say whether any sufficient reason had been shown for reopening the question after a lapse of thirty years. It appeared to him that Mr. Tayler had had ample opportunity of instituting a judicial inquiry into his case, and he did not think it would be reasonable for the House of Commons to reopen the question now.

INDIAN FRONTIER DEFENCES.

Mr. Slagg asked the Under-Secretary of State for India whether it was true, as stated in the Times, that the Government of India contemplated the raising of a special loan to meet the cost of the frontier defences.

Sir J. Gorst: The Government of India do not propose to raise a special loan in order to meet the cost of the frontier defences. It has been decided not to impose taxation for this purpose, and hence the financial statement shows a deficit in the Budget for 1888-9; but the charge can, according to the estimate, be met from the cash balances.

Mr. Slagg: Then the statement in the Times is incorrect? Sir J. Gorst: I have not seen the statement in the Times.

JUNE 19.

THE UNCOVENANTED CIVIL SERVICE OF INDIA.

Mr. MacNeill asked the Under-Secretary of State for India whether it was a fact that members of the Uncovenanted India whether it was a fact that members of the Uncovenanted Civil Service of India who were in receipt of a salary of Rs. 6,000 a year on February 10th, 1876, and those appointed by the Secretary of State for India obtained two years' furlough on half-pay after eight years' service, whereas members of the Uncovenanted Civil Service who had been appointed by the Governor-General of India could only obtain one year's furlough after ten years' service; and on what principle was that distinction drawn between members of the Uncovenanted Service appointed by the Secretary of Siate and those appointed Service appointed by the Secretary of State and those appointed by the Indian Government.

by the Indian Government.

Sir J. Gorst: (1.) Yes; subject to the qualification that those to whom the first part part of the question relates held certain specified offices at the date mentioned, and that those mentioned in the last part of the question have been appointed by the Governor-General in Council without the sanction of the Secretary of State, given either before or after the appoint ment. (2.) On the principle that the Uncovenanted Service should be recruited, as far as possible, from natives of India, and that appointments carrying the special privilege mentioned should be filled by officers who are selected in England with special qualifications, or who have gained their appointments by competitive examination involving expensive training.

Mr. MacNeill asked whether members of the Uncovenanted Civil Service of India who were nominated by the Secretary of State for India as officers of the Public Works, Telegraph, and Forest Deparments were allowed to count service for retirement on pension from the year they left Cooper's Hill or other College, irrespective of age, whereas service before the age of twenty-two years in the case of an uncovenanted civilian appointed by the Governor-General of India was not permitted to count as service for retirement on pension; whether officers in the administrative departments of the Uncovenanted Civil Service of India had been placed before the age of twenty-two in charge of divisions of disbefore the age of twenty-two in charge of divisions of dis-tricts and in exercise of the powers of magistrates of the first class; did the Government of India in 1868 recommend that the limit of age for service counting for pension should be reduced; and did the then Secretary of State for India refuse to entertain it; and on what principle was that distinction drawn between different members of the Uncovenanted Civil Sirvice of India.

Sir J. Gorst: The answer to questions 1, 2 and 3 is affirmative. The principle of the distinction is that more favourable pension rules are given to departments recruited in this country, for which special training is requisite.

MR. TAYLER OF PATNA

Sir J. Gorst moved for a return giving the following papers relating to the case of Mr. Tayler of Patna:—Minute of Lord Canning on Mr. William Tayler of Patna, of February 5th, 1859; letter from Governor of India to Governor of Bengal of March 4th, 1859, with extracts of charges made by Mr. Samuells enclosed; letter from Governor of Bengal to Mr. Tayler of March 12th, 1859, offering inquiry into allegations of Mr. Samuells; letter from Governor of Bengal to the Governor of India of April 6th, 1859, with enclosure, being Mr. Tayler's refusal of inquiry.

The motion was agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.
Sir H. HAVELOCK-ALLAN asked the Under-Secretary for India whether his attention had been drawn to three letters in the Times and one in the Morning Post of that day absolutely denying that Mr. William Tayler, ex-Commissioner of Patna, had been offered an inquiry into his conduct in 1859, and had declined that offer; and whether, as that statement materially affected the division on that question prejudicially to Mr Tayler's interests, he was prepared to lay on the table of the House copies of the whole correspondence, pro and con, on which he based that statement, including Mr. Samuells' letter containing offensive imputations against Mr. Tayler, which he subsequently entirely withdrew, and which withdrawal caused Mr. Tayler to say that he did not think it presessant to pursue Mr. Tayler to say that he did not think it necessary to pursue the matter further; also whether he would lay on the table copies of Mr. Tayler's two letters of September, 1856, in which he not only invited, but urgently requested, a full judicial investigation into his conduct.

Sir J. Gorst said that the statement he made on Friday was that Mr. Tayler was offered an inquiry into the correctness of Lord Canning's belief that in the course of Mr. Tayler's proceedings at Patna men were condemned and executed upon insufficient evidence. The papers which the House had just ordered to be laid on the table would amply justify that statement. The papers which the hon, and gallant baronet required were already before Parliament, with the exception of the letters of September, 1856, for which search would be made in

POLICE CIRCULARS IN INDIA.

Mr. Slagg asked the Under-Secretary for India whether he had now seen the "confidential" circular No. 5 issued by Mr. J. C. Veasey, Inspector-General of Police, Bengal, dated Calcutta, December 30, 1887, which directed the police, among other subjects, to scrutinise and report weekly upon "everything, however apparently trivial, that can have a political significance, comments on laws and Government measures." significance; comments on laws and Government measures; affairs in independent or semi-it dependent Native States, and affairs in independent or semi-in dependent Native States, and rumours regarding their constitution; objects and proceedings of Native societies, whether established for political or ostensibly for other objects; political or mass meetings, their origin, organisation, and result as to public feeling in the neighbourhood, &c.; and whether the Secretary of State would consider the advisability of directing the circular to be withdrawn.

Sir J. C. Gorst: No official copy has yet been received. In accordance with a promise I gave on June 7 a despatch has been sent to the Government of India on this subject, and as soon as a reply is received the matter will be considered by the Secretary of State in Council.

JUNE 23.

THE PORT OF ADEN.

Mr. SUTHERLAND asked the Under-Secretary of State for India, seeing that three years had now elapsed since the Secretary of State wrote to India recommending the formation of a harbour trust for Aden, chiefly for the purpose of deepening the harbour, and that a Bill to create such trust was passed by the Bombay Council a year ago, what reason was given by the Government of India for the delay now taking place in the accomplishment of that measure; and what was the amount of the accumulated surplus at the credit of the Aden Port Fund from the dues levied upon years for of the Aden Port Fund from the dues levied upon vessels for whose proper accommodation the improvement of the harbour whose proper accommodation the improvement of the narbour had been shown to be absolutely necessary.

Sir J. Gorst: The reasons for delay are given by the Government of India in a telegram, thus:—"Cause of delay, necessity that provision should be inserted in the Bill vesting Government with power to exempt munitions of war from port charges and dues." Pending the formation of the port trust steps are being taken for deepening Aden Harbour. The balance of the port trust fund is Rs. 4,35,000.

LORD CONNEMARA has received a reply from the Chairman of the P. and O. S. N. Company to a letter recently addressed upon the subject of steamers calling at Madras. The Chairman points out the detention of steamers here was great, to say nothing of the risks on entering and leaving the harbour. This delay caused loss to trade between London and Calcutta.

A CONTEMPORARY furnishes the following rule of procedure for a retired officer residing in India who wishes to escape the payment of double income-tax on his remittances to Europe. He "should draw his pension in England through an agent. To do this, he should obtain a last-pension certificate from the paymaster of his circle, which should be exchanged for a final last pension certificate from the Presidency paymaster. This document, together with a power-of-attorney from the officer concerned, a copy of the Government letter sanctioning his pension, and a copy of the Government letter sanctioning his pension, and a copy of the Government General Order announcing his retirement, should be forwarded by him to his agent in England, with instruction to apply at the India Office for payment of his pension. The officer must furnish his agent with a life-certificate quarterly to support his pension bill.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

CAPTAIN MIDDLETON, 3rd Bengal Cavalry, has been appointed to join a committee which is assembling at Simla in order to discuss the advisability of adopting the pony "chunda" system for Bengal Cavalry regiments generally.

SERGEANT HUFFTON and Corporal Wells, of the Madras Artillery Volunteers, have been awarded the Burma medal for services rendered in that country.

THE frequency of thefts of arms from regiments has become sufficiently marked to call for a special notice from the Commander-in-Chief. General Order, dated the 21st May, deals with the subject as follows:

"The Commander-in-Chief regrets to observe that a large number of Government arms have recently been stolen from camps and barracks; the majority being from regiments serving in the Rawalpindi and Peshawar Commands.

"In many cases these losses are due to the absence of necessary precentions cancelly in localities inhabited by the sary precautions, especially in localities inhabited by the Border tribes, where the utmost vigilance is necessary for the safe custody of arms, and his Excellency therefore directs that on a carbine or rifle being stolen a guard is to be put on day and night in that particular troop or company from which the weapon was lost, and furnished by it as an additional pre-caution against the theft of arms. The guard is to be detailed daily for three months from the date on which the loss occurred, but should the arm be recovered before the expira-tion of that period the guard may be withdrawn.

"On the line of march each man is to have the custody of his own firearm, and should be required to keep it by him when asleep at night. He is to be held responsible for its safe custody.

ROYAL Engineer soldiers employed on submarine mining duties are to be allowed a continuance of their former consolidated rates of working pay, pending the issue of orders for the improvement of the military position of these men. At the present time, when the Government at home are laying such stress on the formation of volunteer submarine mining companies for the defence of the home posts and forming new submarine royal engineer mining companies, it is bad policy for the Indian Government to cut down the already too low allowances of the few good men out here who are already sufficiently disgusted with their experiences of the Indian climate without being made more disgusted by reduction to British rates of pay.

In reply to inquiries made by the military authorities in this country, the Ordnance Department at home have stated that they could arm the whole of the British troops in India with the magazine rifles within twelve months from the date of orders being issued.

THE Secretary of State for India has intimated that it has been arranged with the War Office that when a British officer is permitted to remain in India for a time, after the comple-tion of a tour of service, he will be allowed to draw pay from Indian revenues until the date of his return to England, proof his pay for a period of two months, and that an officer shall not, under such circumstances, be entitled to draw more than the British pay of his rank, without allowances, in respect of the time spent in India.

A CHINESE HISTORICAL WORK .- Dr. Edkins writes in the Chinese A CHINESE HISTORICAL WORK.—Dr. Edkins writes in the Chinese Recorder:—In the work, Sheng-hüin, now published, there is a selection of Imperial edicts published during each reign. In the whole work there are 250 volumes, divided into 40 yellow fasciculi. The distribution is irregular. Shun-chih and his father and grandfather have assigned to them eight thin volumes. The greatest of the Emperors, Kang-hi, has 12 volumes, and his son, Yung-cheng, 10. Chien-lung has 72 volumes; Chia-ching, 40; Taw-kwang, 36; Hienfeng, 21; and Tung-chih, 48. The work is arranged under thirty headings for one emperor, under thirty-six for another, under forty for a third, the number varying. The edicts in the reign of Tung-chih are the most voluminous in the whole collection. This is on account of the rebellions, the edicts in regard to which, under one chih are the most voluminous in the whole collection. This is on account of the rebellions, the edicts in regard to which, under one heading only, occupy sixteen volumes. Throughout this work the Emperor is the nominal historian, but many edicts are composed for him by the Cabinet ministers; and when he is a minor this is always the case. Each emperor has his name as a title to his own collection of edicts. It must have been the Emperor Chia-ching's thought to expand the Sheng-hüin to their present size, and it was probably on account of his filial regard for his father. It seems too bad that the Emperor Kang-hi should have only one sixth of the space which is in this collection assigned to Chien-lung. But in the Shih-lu Kang-hi has 1,000 chapters, and this is the full chronicle from which both the Sheng-hüin and Tung-hwa-lu are selected. The Sheng-hüin collection is charged 32 taels by the Peking booksellers. They paid a sum for the copy (said to be 300 taels), and printed it at their own expense. Consequently there are printers' errors. The Shih-lu is printed in the palace for the use of the Emperor and his friends and relatives. Foreigners cannot see it. Foreigners cannot see it.

THE SOIL: A REALISTIC NOVEL.*

THE SOIL: A REALISTIC NOVEL.*

Few nations of the world cling to the soil with the tenacity which characterises the people of France; and "la Terre" of Emile Zola is valuable and interesting, as throwing light upon the bearing of this sentiment upon the national instincts of the Gallic race. And assuredly the picture he draws is extraordinary, and far from satisfactory, in so far as he depicts children using every effort to induce parents to give over to their offspring during life the "soil" which has to be partitioned on death. Cajolery, cunning, deceit, guile, fraud, brutality, harshness, unkindness, unfeeling behaviour, all play an important part in the "race for land," which is the groundwork of this "realistic" novel. Nor is the sketch less enticing when all these vices have ended in the possession of the family patrimony by the rising generation. Teste, M. Zola, children when once they have induced their parents to transfer the coveted possessions from father to son, from ancestor to descendant, from progenitor to offspring, quarrel amongst themselves alike to add to their domains as to obtain the further steam of the second of the family and their domains as to obtain the further steam. from progenitor to offspring, quarrel amongst themselves alike to add to their domains as to obtain the further store of ready cash accumulated during years of scrupulous economy and careful husbandry. Nothing—nay, not even murder—stops them in their mad career of crime and rascality; they go from bad to worse, and the end thereof readers must judge for classes throughout the length and breadth of Europe.

The work is also interesting as showing the ways and means The work is also interesting as showing the ways and means which are adopted by the peasantry to avoid the subdivision of land which is inevitable under the French law; and the idea insensibly arises that a regulation cannot possibly be wise and salutary which is so impracticable in its action that a nation is compelled to devise means to evade the results of a national law. Incidentally, too, the question of "petite culture" is handled in the pages under review, and it is seen that, spite of all the commendation which has been heaped upon this system of national industry, it stands impotent, even when backed by "protection," before the wave of agricultural depression which seems destined to overwhelm the cultivating classes throughout the length and breadth of Europe.

Lastly, what a picture of the morality of the Republic is here drawn! Can it be possible that vices so disgusting crimes so drawn! Can it be possible that vices so disgusting, crimes so revolting, that the bare enumeration of them must suffice to banish Zola's volumes from any and every drawing-room in England, are common everyday occurrences amidst our neighbours across the Channel? And yet if "The Soil" be not an accurate reflex of national habits and customs—if the independence are morely the previous invention of a morbid indecencies are merely the prurient invention of a morbid imagination—how comes it that the peoples of the land, instead of rising in judgment upon such an outrage against their fair name, buy by thousands the book which reviles them, and do name, buy by thousands the book which reviles them, and do homage to a genius which gorges on the infamy of their lives and battens upon the failings of their race? Yet, withal, it is melancholy to suppose that France is honeycombed with immorality, that marriage has lost its sanctity, that the claims of blood are no protection against the assaults of vice, and that hideous, recking bestiality deluges the land with dissoluteness and opens the floodgates of sensuality and licentious freedom. No, this is incredible; and we prefer to class M. Zola's "la Terre" as one of the idiosyncracies of the age—incepticable, unpresentable, and a libel upon a great nation and explicable, unpresentable, and a libel upon a great nation and a proud péople.

HERR PAULUS.†

It is an astonishing age, and few circumstances are more indicative of this truth than the fact that Spiritualism dares to indicative of this truth than the fact that Spiritualism dares to raise its head in the midst of an enlightened race not given to indulge in mental vagaries, but plain hard-headed, soberminded citizens of the Empire. It could well be understood that silly men and sillier women, filled with the love of prying into the unknown, should do worship at the feet of the brazen image which typifies in their imagination the unseen things of an unseen world. It is easy to imagine that in these times, as in all ages of the world a love of the superpartural should law an unseen world. It is easy to imagine that in these times, as in all ages of the world, a love of the supernatural should lay hold of the weak and feeble minds of the few to whom omne ignotum pro magnifico — what is not understood is magnificent. But it passes comprehension that the public should run in mad folly after the mountebanks who, under various guises, impose upon the credulity of their fellow-creatures. There is no difference save in degree between the fortune-teller in the garb of a gipsy and the thought-reader of the Salon. Both trade upon the weaknesses of mankind, both live with their tongue in their cheek, both are impostors; but there is a material distinction in the treatment they receive at the hands of an enlightened country. One is sent to prison at the hands of an enlightened country. One is sent to prison as a rogue and vagabond, the other makes a fortune, and is the darling of the drawing-room, the delight of society, the idol of the giddy butterflies who flit away existence in the sunshine of Lendon life.

Mr. Besant deals with the more respectable of the two classes of mountebanks, and in the person of Herr Paulus draws the picture of a clever, sentimental, educated "medium," who differs, perhaps, from the ordinary run of his fraternity only in so far as he did not labour for paltry pelf, but for ambition, and the love of triumph and success. It may well be imagined that so practised a writer, so keen a satirist of the weaknesses and foibles of mankind, has lost no opportunity of lashing most mercilessly the failings of the crazyof the weaknesses and follows of manking, has lost no opportunity of lashing most mercilessly the failings of the crazyminded enthusiasts who neglect the concerns of this world while seeking to pry into the mysteries of the unseen realms. Irony, bitter, severe, and caustic, meets the eye at every turn. No one escapes, and the novel must be rather unpleasant reading for the intriguing plunderers who batten on the fat of the land and leave a wake of bleated life and migused telepta the land and leave a wake of blasted life and misused talents in the rear of this world's history. Nor is Mr. Besant less skilful in portraying the numerous difficulties which are involved in a relief in the art of Spiritualism—the many "inconsistencies, follies, and sins" which beset the path of the disciple of the "uncannyites." The work is also interesting as showing to some degree in outline the system upon which the frauds are conducted. The profession, if not noble, is at any rate arduous, involving not only natural gifts, but considerable acumen and careful reflection. The "dupes" have to be studied to a pitch that the medium may be able in the end to read their inmost thoughts by the expression of their faces. Much labour and self sacrifice has to be undergone; but if there be any inclined to think that the art is aught but "black," to such may be given good, honest, wholesome advice—read Mr. Besant's able, interesting, and biting sarcasm, "Herr Paulus." the land and leave a wake of blasted life and misused talents

STRUGGLES FOR LIFE.±

We are glad to welcome a third edition of Dr. William Knighton's masterly essays, entitled "Struggles for Life," a work to which we called attention in our issue of August 15, 1887. If to the praise then lavishly but honestly awarded little can be added, on the other hand, none need be deducted therefrom. The public have passed judgment, and to the verdict of emproyal we are pleased every single dates. the verdict of approval we are pleased once again to add our modicum, the more so as a copious index supplies the only deficiency in a book which is the outcome of considerable thought and no less experience.

Books for Review.—"A Martyr to Pride," by Walter Stanhope (W. H. Allen and Co.); "Walter Stanhope," by John Copland (W. H. Allen and Co.); "Sketches of some Distinguished Anglo-Indians," second series, by Colonel W. F. B. Laurie (W. H. Allen and Co.).

ELEPHANT CATCHING.—Elephants were caught last year in eight districts of Assam, and the proceeds showed a decrease of Rs. 1,045 in the Khasi and Jaintia Hills, compared with the previous year, and an increase amounting to Rs. 16,681 in the seven other districts. Captures had thus, on the whole, been large—so large, in fact, that the price of elephants was depreciated. An elephant caught by Natives was confiscated in consequence of an attempt to evade the Government. in consequence of an attempt to evade the Government royalty. A proposition to promote the breeding of elephants by giving the mahals, or catching-grounds, periodical rest, has been sanctioned by the Chief Commissioner except in one district, where the safety of inhabitants and travellers requires that the number of wild elephants should be reduced.

"The reputation of Æsculap Water as a mild but effective aperient continues to grow. Constipation, as one of the minor ills of town life, occupies a prominent place. The natural and sufficient action of the bowels every day often makes all the difference between happiness and misery. Some witty person disposed of Mr. Mallock's book and argument 'Is Life worth living?' in a single sentence. 'It depends upon the liver," said the wit. No doubt it does to a very large extent—on the liver and the pocket, at any rate. Æsculap water acts very gently upon the liver, and it does not worry afterwards. We do not say that every household should possess is, because there are here and there households so preternaturally and unpardonably healthy that the doctor so preternaturally and unpardonably healthy that the doctor and all his infinite resources are utterly despised. But every household where livers are known to be, even occasionally, troublesome would do well to have a dozen bottles of Æsculap always in the cellar. It is one of the pleasantest medicines in the world for women and children if properly manipulated and converted into lemonade with lemon-juice and sugar."-The Hospital, May 26, 1888.

THE TAYLER CONTROVERSY.

It has been said with some truth that the world cares only for successful men, and that the man with a grievance, however real that grievance may be, is sooner or later regarded by his fellow-men as a bore. Undeterred, however, by such experience, Mr. William Taylor and his friends are still determined to fight his battle. It has been a very uphill fight for upwards of thirty years, and we are sorry to say that it does not now seem to be won, strong as are the forces of facts, arguments, and personal influences which have been brought to bear upon his side. The debate in the Commons on the 15th instant, when Sir Roper Lethbridge moved, "That in the opinion of this House it is desirable, with a view to the settlement of a long-standing controversy as to the wrong stated to have been suffered by a meritorious servant of the Crown, that a Select Committee should be appointed to inquire into this case," ended by the rejection of the motion in spite of the strong points brought forward by the mover, and notwithstanding the passionate and eloquent appeal for justice made by Sir Havelock-Allan. Sir J. Gorst, who at one time actually signed a memorial backing up a similar appeal, did all that he could well do in his official capacity to damage Mr. Tayler's case and reputation. Perhaps the strongest point which the Under-Secretary made was in the assurance which he gave the House that Mr. Tayler had been offered an inquiry into his case by Lord Canning, and had declined the offer. This statement had, no doubt, a considerable effect upon honourable members inside and upon honourable men outside of the House of Commons. Mr. W. H. Smith, in closing the debate, dwelt altogether upon this statement of Sir J. Gorst's as being quite sufficient to put Mr. Tayler out of Court. "However much," said he, "hon. members might sympathise with a gentleman of advanced age who believed that he had suffered wrong, let them remember that at the time of these occurrences, when all the requisite evidence was procurable, this gentleman was offered a judicial inquiry, and deliberately declined the offer."

It turns out, however, that no such offer was ever made.

The inquiry offered by Lord Canning referred to a matter altogether different to, and distinct from, the complaint made by Mr. Tayler against what he considered his unjust removal from his official position at Patna. Letters have appeared in the Times from Mr. Tayler himself, from Sir Roper Lethbridge, and from Mr. T. R. Holmes, clearly demonstrating this, but there was no opportunity allowed at the time of the debate to controvert Sir J. Gorst's damaging statement. In his letter to the Times, published to-day, Sir Roper Lethbridge clearly shows how Sir J. Gorst misled the House, and he sums up the matter pointedly thus:-

Sir, I venture to ask, with some confidence, will any reasonable person maintain that that offer, and its rejection by Mr. Tayler in 1858, can be held to absolve the Government from granting a real inquiry in 1888? That is the question that would have been offered to Sir John Gorst by Sir Henry Havelock-Allan and myself last Friday, if the rules of debate had allowed us to answer him. Thirty years ago the shameful charges of Mr. Samuells, strangely resuscitated in these latter days by the Under-Secretary of State for India, were indignantly traversed by Mr. Tayler, pulverised by Sir Barnes Peacock, and finally withdrawn by their miserable author; so that it is hardly to be wondered at if we were utterly unprethat it is hardly to be wondered at if we were utterly unpre-pared, at a moment's notice, to explain a so-called "offer of inquiry" into these exploded charges that had never more than an ephemeral and illusory existence.

The question now is, what will Sir J. Gorst do? Will he candidly acknowledge his error, and generously come forward to offer all assistance in his power to have wrong righted and justice done? Or will he remain as officially discreet and silent about this matter as he was about the abstraction of Mr. Tayler's memorial and others papers from the records of the India Office?

SILVER AND TEA.

Various causes have combined with the renewed fall in silver, brought about seemingly by the added weight of Australian supplies, to revive interest in the possible course of Eastern exchange. The powerful demonstration of the Bi-metallic League at Manchester has given a fresh impulse to inquire into the natural relations between the precious metals, and curiosity is stimulated as to the probable conclusions of the Royal Commission which has been engaged for the last twelvemonths in collecting the evidence and opinion of experts on the subject. Twelve months ago opinion of experts on the subject. there seemed a reasonable prospect that bottom of some The accumulation kind had been approximately reached. of silver thrown on the market in the strivings of various nations after gold had been considerably worked off; the price had fallen to a point at which production was becoming unprofitable in some districts, and there were indications of an addition to the world's supply of gold which might help to relieve the strain. Unfortunately the output, and still more apprehension of what may be the future output in South Australia came to increase the glut of silver more rapidly than the Cape has yielded up its store of the dearer metal; and the result has been a further fall in Eastern exchange which has revived the feeling of despair as to the future of the rupee.

It is, indeed, mainly from the point of view of Indian finance that we venture to approach the subject at the present moment; the momentary fall of the rupee below 1s. 4d., accompanying a fall in the tael below 4s. 2d., having recalled attention to the Indian budget, which is the outward and visible sign of exchange to the great majority of English people; and revived the threat of the closing of the Calcutta mint, which has been once and again held out as a possible necessity of finance. For the moment the fall has been arrested, and a temporary level re-established; but the feeling of insecurity remains, and the remedy is one that is sure to be again put forward if Australian supplies cause renewed disturbance. We scarcely fancy, however, that those who are prompt with this heroic suggestion have fairly thought out the consequences to at least one great Indian industry. Have they realised what would be the effect on Indian tea of any measures to maintain the rupee at an arbitrary level, while the tael continued to fall with the market price of silver? Would it not be at once to bonus China tea, in the same way that England, in her purblindness, persists in bonussing Indian corn? A great portion of the agricultural distress in this country is notoriously caused by the fact that a sovereign will now buy fifteen rupees instead of ten, whereas a rupee will still buy as much Indian corn as before—with the evident result that a sovereign will buy so much more corn, and the price of English wheat has to fall correspondingly. not a similar result follow any attempt to maintain the rupee at a higher rate, proportionately to the market value of silver, than the tael? The tael would still buy as much tea in China, but the taels themselves would cost fewer sovereigns, while the relative fall of the rupee would be arrested, and the effect would be to bonus China tea quâ Indian tea, just as Indian wheat is bonussed quâ English wheat, with the almost certain consequence of arresting the present rapid progress of cultivation—even if the tables were not turned again in favour of the China grower. And though English farmers may be content to go on bonussing India, such as those of JOHN RIDD'S day were content to go on paying tribute of sheep to the Doones, we doubt the Indian Government willingly handicapping an important and growing industry. Nor would it be against Tea alone that such a policy would take effect. Tea is not the only product in which India competes with China for European custom, nor the only one in which a level of currency between the two countries is essential to her success. effect of such a bonus might be to develop, afresh, the capacity of China for exporting cotton which was demonstrated during the American war; and a disturbance of currency level would probably check the present rapid growth of the yarn export from India to the Far East. For it must be recognised that the closure of the Indian mints would almost certainly be to cause a further fall in silver, which would at once bonus the silver-using countries. that had not adopted this heroic device.

The mere hint at such a remedy is at once a proof how imperfectly currency questions are understood, and how imperfectly people are accustomed to think out the disarranging effect of partial measures. It is one of the strongest arguments of bimetallists that no such relative disturbances could follow the frank adoption of both metals as world-wide currency; while the mere fact that the possibility is admitted of maintaining the rupee, by such a legislative measure, at a nominal currency value, is an admission also of the bimetallist contention that a fixed ratio could be maintained by legislation between silver and The effect of remonetising silver would be to stimulate production of the metal, without doubt, but it would also increase the demand. The effect would be to raise prices, no doubt, but the rise of price which followed the abundant inrush of gold from California and Australia did not appear to do any one much harm! The advantages, indeed, of an abundant currency are so self-evident, that it seems hardly necessary to put forward the reductio ad absurdum of a condition of barter, to illustrate the con-

In the course of a very few weeks, now, we may look, probably, for the report of the Royal Commission on this much vexed question; and though divergence of opinion among its members may lessen the authority of their utterance, the report itself can hardly fail to augment the general store of facts from which people can draw their own conclusions. Rumour has it that the balance of opinion is nearly evenly divided; one half of the Commissioners favouring gold monometallism, while the other half inclines to remonetise silver as a remedy for the present depression; and, as few questions except religion and politics are so fitted to develop opinionativeness, we may expect, probably, much vigorous utterance. ever, to the promised propaganda of the Bimetallic League that we look more hopefully to enlighten the general public, than to the comparatively recondite utterances of the Royal Commission. The fact that monometallism is mainly responsible for depressing the price of produce and manufactures, might be gradually brought home to the agricultural and manufacturing classes: and we must be content in the meantime to look for increased supplies of the dearer metal, to counterbalance the yield of silver. Transvaal goldfields are at length beginning to send forth appreciable quantities, and from various other parts of the world we have hopeful indications of increasing supply. Even Wales promises really to become, at length, a factor in the problem; and China would certainly, if the vices of peculation and nepotism could be kept under, be able to contribute a valuable quota from those Amoor goldfields which LI HUNG-CHANG is striving to develop.—London and China Telegraph.

The last report of cholera at Cashmere, dated Srinagar, 28th May, states that there was a slight increase in comparison with the two previous days, 162 fresh cases and 83 deathsbeing reported in Srinagar in the previous twenty-four hours.

The news of the death of Mr. Leslie Saunders by an accident while riding, will be received with great regret in many parts of India, especially at Ajmere, where Mr. Saunders left bchind him a very excellent reputation when he went to take the Commissionership of the Berars. He was one of four brothers who held responsible positions in India Mr. C.P. brothers who helds responsible positions in India, Mr. C. B. Saunders, formerly resident at Hyderabad, Mr. Reginald Saunders, a well-known member of the Bengal Civil Service, who retired a few years ago, and Mr. Arthur Saunders, formerly agent of the Madras Railway, being the three others. His is the third death by miscalway treather that her heappand is His is the third death by misadventure that has happened in his family in India, a niece having lost her life, like himself, by a fall from her horse, and a nephew having been accidentally poisoned.

OBITUARY.

MAJOR LEGH RICHMOND BATTYE, whose death in a fight with the tribes bordering the Punjab frontier has been announced by telegraph, was the ninth son of Mr. G. W. Battye, late of the Bengal Civil Service, and brother of the Quintin Battye who was killed in 1857 at the seige of Delhi, and of the Wigram Battye who was shot dead charging at the head of a squadron of the Corps of Guides, at Fatehabad, near Jellalabad, on the 2nd of April, 1879. Of his ten sons, all of whom Mr. Battye gave to the military service of his country, there remain in active employment two—Colonel Arthur Battye, who commanded the 2nd Goorkhas in Sir F. Roberts's famous march, and was made a C.B. for his services, and Major F. Battye, now commanding the cavalry of the Corps of Guides on the Punjab frontier.

CAPTAIN H. BRABAZON URMSTON, who was killed in company with Colonel Battye, was the eldest son Colonel H. Brabazon Urmston, of Ardenlee, Maidstone. Captain Urmston was educated at Winchester College, where he became a prefect, and then matriculated at Brasenose College, Oxford, but preferring to follow his father's career in the East, he entered the army in 1871, and joined the 14th Foot till he was qualified for the Indian Staff Corps, when, after rapidly passing the higher standard examinations in two Native languages, he was appointed to the frontier force (2nd Sikh Regiment), and soon became adjutant of the 6th Punjab Infantry. He served throughout the Jowaki Campaign, for six months on the Afghan border, receiving at its close a medal, and was mentioned in the General's despatches for his able military surveys and sketches. When the Afghan war broke out in 1878 he was selected by Sir Frederick Roberts for the duties of transport officer with the Kuram division of the Army, and received at the close of that campaign another medal. During the summer of 1885 Captain Urmston was attached to the intelligence branch of the Army at headquarters, Simla, and in 1886 he was appointed by the Government of India to examine our chief military stations and arsenals, and the organisation of our Army.

COMMUTATION OF PENSIONS.

(Englishman.)

Every now and then the question of the commutation of pensions is discussed, and again it has been taken up by a home contemporary. It is hardly necessary to say that it has been a favourite policy with the Government of India to offer to retiring officers the choice between the pension of their rank and the capitalized value of the pension. Very naturally, the prospect of receiving a lump sum of money, much larger than any amount they ever had before at their absolute disposal, has tempted many officers to take the capitalized value. Almost every one thinks that he can invest this capital in a manner which shall give him a much better income than he would have had in his pension. A correspondent states that this system has led to very disastrous results. Officers, inexperienced in business, and not at all able to cope with the wiles of those City robbers who style themselves financiers, have become the regular prey of the professional swindlers who promote bubble companies, and advertise their own prowess in making wonderful profits through speculations on the Stock Exchange. It may seem humiliating to officers to be told that they are not fit to take care of their own money, but, to a certain extent, judgment has already been given against them on this point; for by the latest regulations now in force in England, an officer is not allowed to commute the last £80 of his pension. If he succeeds in getting robbed of the rest of his money, he is still to be required to maintain his life on thirty shillings a week, as a scarecrow and warning to others. Commutation of pensions is not allowed in foreign armies, and it is not recognized in the lower rank of the British service. A powerful movement seems to have been made to induce the Secretary of State for War to prohibit the commutation of persons altogether. Of course there is another side to the question; and although numerous instances may be quoted of officers who have practically gambled with their capital and lost it there are not wanting well-known examples

THE municipal election resulted in the return chiefly of Natives, with two East Indian, and one Mahomedan.

Miscellaneous.

THE case in which Colonel Tabuteau and officers of the 9th Madras Infantry are charged before the magistrate with entering certain land, and with a hundred Sepoys destroying huts thereon, is now being heard at Madras.

A CROWDED and enthusiastic meeting of Raises landholders, Mahajans, pleaders of Nagpur and several outlying districts was held on June 4th at the City School building. Resolutions protesting against the rumours of the transfer of some of the Central Provinces districts to Bombay and for men memorialising Government on the subject were unanimously passed.

THE Bill for amalgamating the Judicial system of Oudh with that of the North-West under a common High Court has been drafted and is ready for presentation to Parliament. So much and no more is known for certain in this country about the measure. But it is pretty well understood that the strength of the High Court bench will be raised to seven judges, and that the Bill will contain a general clause enabling the Governor-General in future to extend the jurisdiction of a High Court to any place which he desires without the necessity of resorting to Parliament for legislation.

Parliament for legislation.

INDIAN GOLD MINING SHARES.—These Shares on Saturday were practically unaltered. Nine Reefs met with a little inquiry. Mysore Shares were last quoted 2½ to 3, Nundydroog 19s. 6d. to 20s. 6d., Indian Consolidated 3s. 9d to 4s. 3d., Balaghat-Mysore (15s. paid) 7s. to 8s., ditto fully paid (£1) 12s. to 13s., Ooregum 12s. to 13s., ditto Preference 12s. to 13s., Devala-Moyar 4s. to 5s., Nine Reefs 7s. 6d. to 8s. 6d., Mysore Reefs (£1 paid) 3s. 6d. to 4s., Mysore-Wynaad (17s. 6d. paid) 2s. to 2s. 6d., Indian Glenrock 3s. to 4s., Gold Fields of Mysore 11-16 to 13-16, New South-East Wynaad 2s. to 3s., Wentworth (17s. paid) 2s. to 4s., Wynaad Perseverance 1s. to 2s., and Mysore West (fully paid) 3s. to 4s.

A DISTINGUISHED BURMESE.—Among the students of the Middle Temple called to the Bar last week, was Mr. Chan-Toon, a native of Burma. During his studentship Mr. Chan-Toon competed for the eight principal prizes open to law students and gained them all. At a Parliament of the Benchers of the Middle Temple the following resolution has been passed:—"The Masters of the Bench of the Middle Temple desire to offer their best congratulations to Mr. Chan-Toon on his most distinguished career as a student of the Inn, and, recognising the great honour Mr. Chan-Toon has, by his success, gained for the society, the Masters of the Bench express the sincere hope that his career throughout life may fulfil the promise of its commencement." In forwarding the resolution to Mr. Chan-Toon, the treasurer, Sir Henry James, informs him that to no other student of the Inn has a similar compliment ever been paid.

The Mysore Gold Mining Company (Limited).—At a meeting on Friday of the Mysore Gold Mining Company (Limited), the resolution passed at the last meeting was confirmed. By this resolution the Directors are authorised to increase the capital to £175,000 by the issue of 25,000 Ordinary Shares of £1 each, to be issued at a premium of £1, and to be offered in the first instance to the Shareholders in the proportion of one Share to every six Shares. Though the meeting was called for a special purpose, Captain Plummer, who was present, gave a little information of an exceedingly encouraging character. Amongst other things, he expressed his gratification with the improvement which, he said, seems to have taken place since he left India. In the Italian stope, which is an important working, at the time he left the assays were 1 oz. 5 dwts. to 2 oz. to the ton; last week the lode has increased from 2 ft. wide to 3 ft., and assayed up to 4 oz. to the ton, which is a very considerable improvement. The 296 north of Taylor's shaft is also further improved; at the time he left the stuff assayed 5 dwts. and some odd grains to the ton, and by the last report it had opened up to 4 ft. wide, and was worth 14 dwts. to the ton. Captain Plummer also stated that the sanitation of the place is good.

THE ASSAM COMMISSION.—According to a Calcutta paper there will be a great deal of shifting in the Assam Commission during the present year—"Two of three first grade Deputy Commissioners, Colonel A. E. Campbell and Colonel W. C. S. Clarke, have already taken leave preparatory to retirement, and it is rumoured that Colonel Sir James Johnstone, K.C.S.I., who stands first on the list of 2nd grade Deputy Commissioners, is not likely to return to Assam. At the same time it is believed that Mr. G. Stevenson, C.S., who has worked the district of Sylhet, by far the heaviest district in Assam for five years, is anxious to return to Bengal, and arrangements have already been concluded to permit Mr. R. T. Greer, C.S., who has just come out after long furlough to England, to go back to the larger out after long furlough to England, to go back to the larger province. It remains to be seen how far juniors in the Assam Commission will be allowed to benefit by this commotion among their superiors, and how far they will be kept down by the importation of senior men from Bengal. At present arrangements have been made for Captain Maxwell to succeed Colonel Clarke in Shillong, and for Mr. R. B. McCabe to succeed Colonel Campbell in Tezpur, while Captain Gray becomes Deputy Commissioner of Dhubri, Mr. F. St. C. Grimwood goes to Manipur as Political Agent in the place of Mr. A. J. Primrose, who has taken special leave, and Mr. A. Porteous succeeds Mr. R. B. McCabe as Deputy Commissioner of the Naga Hills."

THE INVESTITURE AT SIMLA.—The irreverent Civil and Military Gazette says:—"Lord Dufferin, like most clever men, has a sense of the humorous; so perhaps the late Investiture Ceremony, of the funny side of which he could but have been conscious, may have yielded him some compensating amusement. Why Sir Frederick Roberts, who is a dapper, smartlooking soldier in his uniform, should have been planted in the middle of the room, swathed in a voluminous black robe, foot too love and a synthesic high in order that the the the middle of the room, swathed in a voluminous black robe, a foot too long and a yard too high, in order that the Viceroy might place a jingling chain, which had been lifted with preternatural solemnity from an adjacent teapoy and conveyed to him on a cushion, round the victim's neck and pronounce the victim a Knight Grand Commander of the Indian Empire, no ordinary man can make out. Then, when the Chief retired, his Staff, who were to have formed a procession behind him, were so unhinged that they forgot both themselves and his Excellency, and went for their places with a rush. The best drilled actor on the occasion was Mr. Durand, the Secretary to the Order, whose robes became him; and he contrived not to smile. The most miserable actor was the Private Secretary, whose expression of agony and apprehension might have tary, whose expression of agony and apprehension might have moved the stoniest. When it so happens that the accessories successful of a pageant are wanting, can't the thing be done by a Royal Warrant merely, and the etceteras left out? Pity the poor Order."

DUTY ON SILVER-WARE.—The Jam-e-Jamshed says:— 'Lord Dufferin deserves the best thanks of the inhabitants of this country for the endeavours he has been making in removing the duty imposed in England on silver-ware exported from India. It is scarcely fair on the part of England to continue the duty on silver-ware when they have abolished the import duty levied in India on piece-goods sent out from that country. It is not probable that the British Government will just at present consent to do away with the duty on silver articles. It would be better, therefore, for the Viceroy to fight for the reimposition of the import duty, which will bring in about a crore and a-half of rupees to the Indian revenue. Perhaps there is no time left for him to fight for the cause, but he may as well set the half relling previous to his deporture from as well set the ball rolling previous to his departure from India, leaving the completion of the work to his successor. If his lordship were to move in the matter, he would undoubtedly earn the best thanks of the inhabitants of this country." The Akbari-Soudagar says:—"The Viceroy's hands must be strengthened by the several political bodies in India in the matter of the proposed abolition of duty on silver-ware exported from this country. Like the manufacturers of Mannchester, who successfully agitated in the matter of the removal of the import duty on piece-goods, the several local political of the import duty on piece-goods, the several local political associations must continue to agitate for the removal of the duty on silver-ware exported from this country.

The Army and Navy Gazette publishes in tabulated form a list of the war vessels, with their speed, and the number of their guns and crews, which assembled at Barcelona in honour of the opening of the Exhibition by the Queen of Spain. As the comparison is not very flattering to Great Britain the Gazette concludes that "it would, perhaps, have been wiser to have abstained from participating altogether, since we could only exhibit our poverty in those waters where we must be supreme, or withdraw and abandon all we now possess. And is the humiliation our naval officers must have felt to count for nothing? Apart from the fact of the compliment to the Queen's son whose flag flies in those waters, it would have been worth our while to show to every foreigner that we have no difficulty in putting at any time, in any port in the world, two pennants for one which a rival can show." The following is a summary of the statement:—

TROUBLESOME NAGAS.—A Calcutta paper says:—"There has been a good deal of trouble lately in the Naga Hills, although the outside world has not heard very much about it. The annual military promenade through the country of the Hatiguria Nagas, which was directed by the Government of India in order to enforce our political control over these tribes, has not been the mere parade that was expected. These Nagas have not yet given up their former habits and customs, and continue to raid on each other on the slightest provocation, and with little heed to the warning of the British officers around them." around them."

THE CALCUTTA REVIEW.

(The only Quarterly Review in India.) ESTABLISHED 1844.

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it... there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Etatesman, October 1886.

.... The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutia Review, which has done far more for In-lian literature than anything I have written under my own name —J. W. KAYE, Athenæum Club, June 22, 1279.

The Calcutta R view has given us valuable articles on the army. Sen a from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophesy of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.—Address of the C.-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

. . . The Calcutta Review has not only throughout its caro-r reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its wel-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westmineter

THE ARROW BROAD

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A sories of illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions. Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its corre-pondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

ments."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is surplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the Fren3h, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, Freuch, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opini in England regarding Military affairs.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

TO THE UBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE CF

INDIA.

INDIA.

There are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing monratur (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian veople.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public mon destrous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Chibs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intolligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our feilow-subjects.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

SATURDAY, JUNE 30, 1888.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 12th June; from Allahabad and Madras to the 10th June; and from Calcutta to the 9th June.

It is said to be likely that serious consideration will be given to a suggestion to raise a special loan to meet expenditure upon the Indian defences, it being argued that posterity, which will materially benefit by the defensive measures now undertaken, should share the weight of the burden.

ALL the opinions of the Local Governments upon the Public Service Commission's report are expected to be in by the end of the current month. Bombay, Madras, and the Punjab are the only ones still to be received.

THE question of creating a Deputy Secretary for the Finance Department of the Government of India, after being believed to have been shelved, was brought up last week before Council, with the result that a representation has gone home in favour of the appointment.

THE question of the retention or abolition of the Calcutta Mint has been decided in favour of that institution. Such was the outcome of a full discussion of the subject that took place in Council June 6.

An important resolution will shortly be issued by the Government of India dealing with Sir Alfred Croft's memorandum on the education question in India. The subject of technical education will probably be found to receive much attention.

Some interrogatories, after the manner of those with which the Mining Scandal were inaugurated, were lately administered to Abdul Huq regarding the Railway scheme. The replies have been received, and are under the consideration of his Highness's Government.

SIR DILER JUNG is at present in Bombay.

It has been decided to raise a battalion of loyal Karens. It will number one thousand men, and, with the exception of the commandant, all the officers will be Karens. A Karen doctor will also be attached. It is confidently expected that these troops will do excellent service in the suppression of dacoity.

THE Government of India have sanctioned Rs. 5,000 for the people of Berbera, to alleviate the distress of the population consequent on the burning of the town.

DACOITY is flourishing in Kathiawar. On the 28th ult. the Jamnugur State mail was intercepted by dacoits, who tore up all the documents.

Two Inspector-Generalships of Army Signalling are to be created in India, one for the whole of the Bengal forces, and the other for Madras and Bombay.

THE Tashon Chins have been threatened with a punitive expedition unless the Shwaygyobin prince and followers are surrendered.

GENERAL STEDMAN left Mandalay with two guns on June 8th for Mogoung.

H.H. THE SULTAN OF MUSCAT died on the 4th inst. His second son succeeds him.

COLONEL HUGHES HALLETT officiates as Judge Advocate-General during the absence of Colonel Clementi. Major Sanderson replaces the latter.

CHOLERA has broken out with severity in Baroda.

CHOLERA seems to be spreading from Kashmir into the Punjab, the disease having appeared in the Shahpur, Jhelum, and Rawalpindi districts.

DACOTTY in Upper Burma is again a source of trouble to the authorities.

It is likely that a great medical petition will be forwarded to England supporting the C.D. Acts in India?

THE Bill for the amalgamation of the judicial system of Oudh with that of the North-West Provinces, under one High Court, is ready for presentation to Parliament.

QUARANTINE has been imposed at Aden on arrivals from the Singkel islands of Sumatra.

In the case of the attempt on the life of the Nawab of Mamdote, the accused, one Khan Muhammad, has been sentenced by the Divisional Judge of Ferozpore to transportation for life.

Mr. H. Dawson, District Superintendent of Police of Gaya, has been killed by a fall from his horse.

THE Travancore Government have decided to propose the adoption of the Standing Orders of the Madras Board of Revenue. The measure will be considered at the first meetings of the new Legislative Council. The same Government has ordered heads of departments and Dewan Peishcars to invite opinions on the complaints of the people, their districts keeping a register of the same and submitting copies to Government.

Mr. C. C. Stevens, Commissioner of Chota Nagpore, takes three months' leave at once, Mr. Hopkins from Nuddea acting for him. Mr. Towers, Judge of Midnapore, goes on fifteen months' furlough, and his place is taken by Mr. Pratt, now at Mymensingh; while Mr. Peterson, Judge of Rungpore, goes to Mymensingh.

MR. J. FRIZELLE, Judge of Rawul Pindi, will be appointed to the sixth Judgeship lately created in the Punjab Chief Court.

COLONEL STEEL, R.E., who was recently gazetted as Secretary to the North-West Provinces Government in the Public Works Department, having taken six months' leave, Mr. T. H. Wickes, from Bengal, will officiate in the interval. Mr. J. G. Glass, now on leave at home, succeeds Mr. White as Superintending Engineer at Hyderabad, Mr. Storey, of the State Railways, acting until his return.

COLONEL CLEMENTI, Judge Advocate-General, probably takes leave to England next month.

SIR FRANK SOUTER, the Bombay Commissioner of Police, died suddenly at Ootacamund on June 4th, of heart disease.

MR. G. K. LYON, Bengal Civil Service, who was officiating for Mr. Paul as Deputy Commissioner of Darjeeling, died rather suddenly on May 30th. It appears that a long ride from Kalimpong to Darjeeling brought on a severe cold, and internal homorrhage set in, which terminated fatally.

MR. C. C. MEAD, Bengal Civil Service, who fell ill in March last, died of abscess of the liver, May 30th. He was only twenty-three years old.

NOTES.

If Reuter's telegrams are to be trusted it is satisfactory to learn that letters have been received at Simla from Gnatong to the effect that the Thibetans propose a conference to arrange peace negotiations. It is also satisfactory to learn that it is believed that these overtures are due to the arrival of the new Chinese Resident at Lhassa.

THE Pioneer to hand to-day writes in a hopeful strain:—
"It is darkest before dawn, and the one-and-fourpenny rupee would seem to be the prelude to an awakening on the part of British statesmen that something must be done for the currency. It is, of course, only natural that Secretaries of State and Cabinet Ministers should be the last persons to see and acknowledge this; but one cannot over-estimate the importance of their having come to see it. Judging by the latest advices from England, Lord Cross favours the remedy of a gold standard, which is what we should have expected of him; but it is better that he should favour that than be wholly blind to the subject. And as for Lord Lansdowne, such a vigorous representation as he is credited with purposing would indeed be an admirable beginning for his connection with India."

This is all very well, but we fear that the dawn is not yet nigh, nor will Lord Cross, Lord Lansdowne, or the Bi-metallists bring it nearer. The falling rupee may fall still lower, although we earnestly pray not; but the unfortunate Anglo-Indian who has to remit money home must prepare for even darker days than even the present with exchange close on 1s. 4d.

However, it is satisfactory to know that the meeting of the Uncovenanted Service, which was held in the Simla Town Hall on June 4th, was a thoroughly representative one, and that there was a general concensus of opinion for continuing to press for pensions at 2s. the rupee, and for refusing a compromise at a fixed rate even of 1s. 8d. This agitation must have some effect upon the Government—gutta cavet lapidem, &c.

THE Bombay papers are not at all satisfied with the disstribution of the "Birthday Honours," holding, of course, that Bombay has not come in for its fair share. The Times of India is excessively sore on this point, as may be seen from the following:—

It seems as though in the distribution of honours considerations relating to a man's services were largely qualified by considerations of ageographical order, and that his chances of recognition were in inverse ratio with his distance from Simla and from Bengal. Hence we suppose it would be inappropriate to institute a comparison between the contributions to public works and public architecture which Mr. Stevens has made and those which stand to the credit of some others who have profited from the supreme advantage of being posted much nearer the steps of the fountain of honour than their professional brethren. The same principle of distribution seems to have been kept in mind in at least one other instance. It may be asked why, if it was deemed necessary to do honour to the Volunteer service, the commanding officers of the not very important corps at Allahabad and Simla were alone deemed worthy of the distinction. We could point to a commanding officer of Volunteers nearer at hand whose services in the good cause have given him at least as good a claim as either of these.

LOCAL SELF-GOVERNMENT is in a bad way in Madras as well as in Bombay. At Ganjam the President of the District Board states that it is nearly impossible to get a quorum. It was only with the greatest difficulty, and after issuing "special and urgent requisitions," that a meeting was got together recently for the purpose of passing the budget estimates. Mr. Horsfall, the President, is unable to recommend any remedial course. "I fail to see any way out of this difficulty, as the removal of such members on the score of non-attendance would bring in no better results, ince the persons replacing them could not be expected to do better than their predecessors, chiefly in consequence of distance. There is no alternative that I am aware of that could be adopted to remedy this evil." The local Government is equally unable to suggest a remedy, and so Ganjam is left quorumless and disorganised.

Mr. Horsfall seems to be in despair, but there is one course left—Why not abolish the Board altogether? The Englishman, which recommends this course, says:—"From what we hear this might be done with advantage much nearer home than Madras, and for other reasons than nonattendance. The reports that reach us from many parts of Bengal are by no means favourable to the proposed extension of local self-government which the Government has under consideration. Any such proposal at the present time must be regarded as premature, apart from the fact that the system is already breaking down in many parts of India. Before granting any further concessions on the lines of Lord Ripon's measure the Bengal Government would do well to publish the opinions it has recently received from district officers on the working of local bodies throughout the country. Sir Steuart Bayley's attitude in this and similar matters is fully appreciated, and it is impossible for the opinion of the service and of the European community at large to remain long unexpressed. That opinion, we believe, is entirely opposed to the policy that is being adopted, and is only held in suspense in the hope that wiser counsels may prevail."

A correspondent in Upper Burmah writes to the Times of India that the constitution of the police force is causing serious trouble, and is likely to cause still more serious trouble in the near future. "We have a lot of superintendents and assistant superintendents of police from India, who don't know a word of the language, nor understand in the least the people or their customs, &c., and are, moreover, possessed of a fine contempt for the Burman." The consequences are, he adds, rapidly becoming deplorable. "This defective police, added to the policy of disarmament, is mainly responsible for the disturbances, and will be responsible for future discontent and disaffection, if not remedied. It is a crying shame that we should have such a rotten police and be disarming the loyal population."

THE Bombay Gazette says that there is no foundation for the rumours that have been current that Colonel Marshall would ask to go to England to give evidence before the Select Committee on the Deccan Mining scandal. The journal named thinks that Colonel Marshall would prefer taking leave to Simla, and so do we.

A REUTER'S telegram from Mandalay, dated June 29th, states that Brigadier-General Wolseley is returning to England on sick leave.

On the arrival of General Sir George White to assume the Upper Burma command, Brigadier-General Low takes three months' leave to England.

The Gazette of India contains a report on the pilgrim season of 1887 from the Vice-Consul at Jeddah. The number of pilgrims gathered on the day of the Haj at Arafat was about 15,000. The number of arrivals by sea was 46,020, of whom 10,324 are classed as Indians. 134 steamers and ships arrived and 52 Arab craft with pilgrims from various places on the Red Sea coast. The number of sick in proportion to arrivals was 49 this year. A good many Indian paupers were left behind in a miserable state, and it is suggested that a fund might be founded by the Rajahs and Nawabs of India to enable them to return to their Native country. Turkish paupers are all returned.

Teaching the Enemy.—The situation in Acheen has, it is reported, become well-nigh untenable. Insecurity prevails everywhere, save in the fort and at headquarters, and officers have been forbidden to ride outside the walls. The Achinese have thrown up fortifications opposite the forts and constructed rifle pits and trenches. The long duration of hostilities has taught the Achinese the art of war, which they do not fail to put in practice. The Governor of Acheen urges the despatch of reinforcements, but the forces in Java are so far below trength that these calls can be only partially met.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

THE CENTRAL INDIA STATES.

The report of the administration of the Central India Agency for the year 1886-87 has just been published, and, as being Sir Lepel Griffin's last word on the States that have been under his charge, has a special interest. Sir Lepel explains that shortly before leaving India he visited the principal States personally in order to place before the Government his final opinion on their administration and prospects. The following extracts give the most notable of his remarks:—

GWALIOR.

The council of Regency have performed their duties with much industry and good sense, under the President, Raja Sir Ganpat Rao, for whom I have been glad to obtain from the Viceroy a recognition of good service in the grant of a salute of nine guns. The Army has been thoroughly controlled by Bapu Sahib Avar and Appa Sahib Angre, the Revenue by Santoba Timuk, the Police by Sahibzada Gulam Ahmed Khan, and the departments immediately connected with the palace and the Maharaja by Baba Sitole Sahib and Bapu Sahib Jadav, grandfather of his Highness. Sir Ganpat Rao, in spite of the conservative character of his training, has fully understood that the British Government, who were responsible for the administration of Gwalior during the minority, insisted upon improvement and reform in every branch of the Government, and he has most loyally followed the line of policy which was indicated to him.

The important work of counting and making proper arrangement for the custody of the treasure left by the late Maharaja devolved upon Colonel Bannerman, and occupied him more than five months of incessant and anxious labour. He was most ably seconded by Baba Sahib Sitôlé, and, although this measure was at first regarded with some suspicion by Gwalior officials, they soon realized its necessity and advisability. The treasure discovered with much difficulty amounted to upwards of six crores of rupees in silver coins, and upwards of one crore in gold and jewels. This represents the savings of the late Maharaja, and I have little doubt that there is still much treasure concealed of older date, and which escaped the hasty search of the mutineers in 1857. When the Council of Regency was first appointed, I urged upon them, as on subsequent occasions, the advantage of investing a large portion of this treasure with the British Government, secure from any untoward accidents such as that which had in the Mutiny caused such serious loss. Considerable opposition was naturally raised to this proposal, but the intelligent counsels of Sir Ganpat Rao and the Resident at length induced the Council almost unanimously to agree to lend the Government three and-a-half crores at 4 per cent. per annum, to be repaid in in telments commencing with the majority of the Maharaja. I also caused the balance of the loan of fifty lakhs borrowed by the late Chief from the British Government to be paid off from the accumulated treasure; and by these two transactions the revenue of the Gwalior State has immediately benefited by a sum of twenty lakhs per annum, and I have good hopes that the Council may ere long see the propriety of making a further loan to the Government, as the amount of treasure at Gwalior is still too large for safety, while they have, from the interest already received from the Government, realised the greal financial advantage which such investments bring to the State. The whole Public Works expenditure will be met from this

I do not think that in the history of India any State has come forward to testify its confidence in the Imperial Government in the same manner and to the same extent as Gwalior has done, and it may be hoped that its loyal example may be followed elsewhere. Dacoity is still rife in the districts bordering on Jhansi, and several selected police officers have been tried there without much good result. I have urged the Council to use their utmost efforts to put down this crime, which more than any other, disorganises a community. I have told them that if no Native officer is competent to perform this work, it will be necessary to send a British officer with full powers to the disturbed districts. This measure I am delaying as long as possible. It is far better to insist on the Council of Regency doing this work themselves than to weaken their hands by relieving them of the responsibility. It is further to be remembered that the districts affected by dacoity have always had a bad reputation for this crime, and the men to whom the Administration should be able to look for support and assistance—the country gentlemen and Rajput Thakurs—are themselves the instigators of dacoity, the protectors of the dacoits, and the receivers of stolen property. The state of these districts is similar to that of the English and Scottish border two hundred years ago. I hope that with strong and constant pressure applied by the Resident at Gwalior, the record in this particular may next year be more satisfactory.

Public works have been rapidly pushed on under the able superintendence of Mr Harris, Chief Engineer, who has several English subordinates under him. The heavy rains of the last season were unfavourable to rapid work, but an immense deal has been done both in road-making and construction of public buildings; the more important grain districts are being opened up by metalled roads, and the survey for a light line of railway from Etawah on the Indian Midland Railway through Goona to Shirpur has been undertaken. It is proposed that a minimum sum of twenty lakhs of rupees be spent on public works; and this year, in spite of the great difficulties of starting a department where everything was new and unknown, it is estimated that the full amount will be profitably expended. With reference to the young Maharaja, I have to report that the appointment of Dr. Crofts has been a very happy one. He has won the affection of the young Chief and the confi-works; and this year, in spite of the great difficulties of starting a department where everything was new and unknown, it is estimated that the full amount will be profitably expended. With reference to the young Maharaja, I have to report that the appointment of Dr. Crofts has been a very happy one. He has won the affection of the young Chief and the confidence of the officials, while he superintends the new medical department which, with the dispensaries and hospitals, is being extended over the whole State. The Maharaja has in every way improved; he is in excellent health, and enjoys the highest spirits, while his education is thoroughly looked after by Dr. Crofts, Pandit Dharam Narain, and others. He is a child of great promise, and of an excellent and affectionate disposition.

On the whole, considering the short time that has elapsed since the reorganisation of the Administration, it may fairly be said that an immense amount of improvement has been achieved without any perceptible friction. We have worked through Mahrattas, officials of the State. The feeling towards the British Government and to English officers is of the most warm and cordial kind, and the change within the past year and a half in this respect is difficult for any one not intimately acquainted with Gwalior to understand. If progress be continued on the same lines and through the local officials, there is little doubt that when Maharaja Sindia obtains full powers, the Gwalior State will be one of the best organized and most prosperous in India.

INDORE.

I regret that I am unable to give so good an account of the Indore State, the administration of which is much neglected by Maharaja Holkar. The promises of good government which he made on coming to the gadi, which were emphasised by the abolition of transit duties and other obnoxious dues, have not been realised, and in spite of numerous urgent and constant warnings, the Maharaja still continues to neglect his public duties. He has had the advantage of a Minister of exceptional capacity, Diwan Raghunath Rao, for whom I have the highest esteem and in whom I have full confidence, and who has done everything in his power to secure a well-ordered administration.

Maharaja Holkar paid a long-desired visit to Europe during the summer of 1887. He was present during the Jubilee celebration in England, and was honoured by receiving the decoration of G.C.S.I. from the hands of Her Majesty the Queen. His stay in England was shorter than was originally intended, and he returned to India in August, after an absence of three months

BHOPAL.

The progress in this state, in which the Government of India is much interested, has been constant, and, up to the close of March, 1887 is recorded in the report of Colonel H. E. Ward, the Minister. Since that time affairs have not progressed so smoothly as before, and more opposition and obstruction have been experienced by the Minister in carrying out the necessary changes in the administration. The disturbing element in Bhopal, which has already given the Government so much trouble, is as active as ever, and the libels published upon the Minister and the Government, which are instigated from Bhopal and paid for by persons residing there, dangerously weaken the authority of the Minister; and I cannot but think that unless the guilty perpetrators of these forgeries and libels are punished as they deserve, the position of the Minister will become, ere long, untenable. Colonel Ward has done excellent service in all departments of the Administration, and is regarded with much confidence by the people. The land revenue assessments are being effectively, and in the face of much obstruction, revised. Justice is properly administered, and all arrears, of many years' standing, have been at last cleared away. A change for the better is apparent in every direction. No reconciliation has taken place between her Highness the Begum and her daughter, the heir-apparent, and this regretted disunion has less chance of removal now that the principal link between the two has been removed by the death of Bilkis Begum, the eldest daughter of the younger lady.

REWAH.

The youthful Maharaja, who is of the same age as the Maharaja Sindia, has been carefully looked after and instructed by his medical attendant and tutor, Dr. Goldsmith. Shortly before leaving India in the spring I had framed a set of rules for the future conduct of the young Prince, which has been strictly observed to the great advantage of the child, his education, and training. They were founded on the recognition of the fact that the time had come when the young Prince of the fact that the time had come when the young Prince should no longer live in the zenana, surrounded by women and unwholosome influences, but that he should be placed under the responsible guardianship of men of authority and position, allowing only his mother to live with him, the other Maharanis being removed to a separate palace. These rules have had a wonderful effect upon the health and character of the boy. They were thoroughly approved by all the members of council and by the high priest of the family. To the ladies of the zenana they were less pleasing, and the Chandelin Maharani, the mother of the child, aggrieved at the allowances hitherto disbursed by her, and notoriously wasted or embezzled being placed in other hands, has with drawn from Rewah to a village on its border, and refuses, for the present, to be appeased. The dispute is a trivial one but I am very anxious to close it, and every effort is being made to induce the lady to return to Rewah, where she will be treated, as ever, with full consideration. ever, with full consideration.

The minor States are dismissed with very brief notices. But there was one feature of the year common to all which is

The Jubilee of Her Most Gracious Majesty was celebrated in Central India with the utmost cordiality, enthusiam and unanimity, and there are few towns of any importance which will not, in some work of public benefit retain the remembrance of this ausqicious event. A full report of the celebration has been submitted to the Government of India.

RUSSIA AND PERSIA.

"Russia has no intention of making a coup de main on Persia."—Reuter's Telegram.

Qui s'excuse s'accuse is a proverb of the truth of which we are constantly being reminded, but the author of the above indignant disclaimer appears to have forgotten this homely maxim. It may possibly be of some interest to the public to know what was thought in Persia about the likelihood of a Russian invasion, as lately as last year, and also the causes which are to be expected to occasion it. To make this clear a brief stretch of Persian politics in processor.

Nasr-ud-Din Shah has two sons—at least two only whom it concerns us to know about. The eldest son is Prince Masoud concerns us to know about. The eldest son is Prince Masoud Mirza, whose portrait appeared a short time back in one of the illustrated papers. The second son is the heir-apparent, and known by his title of the Valy Ahd. The eldest son does not succeed his father, owing to some subtle question of birth, into which we do not need to enter. His title, by which he is commonly known, is Zil-i-Sultan ("Shadow of the king"). He is the Governor of Isfahan, and includes under his sway the provinces of Shiraz, Yezd, Kirman, the Bakhtiari tribes and Kermanshah—in short the whole of Southern Persia. He is immensely nowerful and influential, and is thought more is immensely powerful and influential, and is thought more highly of than the Shah himself. From his boyhood he has shown a marked aptitude as a Governor, and his energetic rule has made the evil doers to tremble in the farthest corners of his dominions. He has cleared the highways from the bands of robbers who formerly infested them, and has done more than any Governor in the country to encourage commerce and safe travelling. As the Persians say, a child might now carry a plateful of money along the highways without being molested. Although a Shiah and a Persian he is neither narrow-minded

Although a Shiah and a Persian he is neither narrow-minded nor fanatical: on the contrary, he is eager to learn and anxious to improve the state of his country. He is well disposed to the English, and is always ready to chat with any traveller whose wanderings may lead him to the Court of Isfahan. His brother, the Valy Ahd, is as unlike himfas it is possible for one man to be unlike another. He has neither his genius, his energy, nor his force of character. A weak priest-ridden creature, he forms a ready tool in the hands of intriguers, who swarm at the Persian Court. Should this man ascend the throne it will be the signal for Persia to slide helplessly back into the slough of bigoted ignorance and stagnation. Anyone who has been through Persia will have seen that the efforts she is making at advancement and improvement are based on so is making at advancement and improvement are based on so unstable a footing that a very slight shock would suffice to overthrow the whole system. The one man who seems capable and desirous of elevating Persia among the nations, and of establishing good order and government, is debarred the throne. What will become of Persia? Will the Valy Ahd be allowed to ascend the throne on the Shah's death, and, unopposed, to win the country?

It is well-known in Persia that the Valy Ahd will not ascend the throne on the Shah's death unopposed. The Zil-i-Sultan is prepared and determined to contest the throne with his younger brother, and will stake all his energy, influence, men and money on the game. His brother is weak, and will need counsel and support. To whom shall he look in this crisis for assistance, and not look in vain? The answer is plain. Russia well knowing her man, as one who can be easily moulded to her will, will then step in, and with a rapid stroke will place the Valy Ahd on the throne and the Zil-i-Sultan in prison. Once on the throne Russian bayonets may be found necessary to keep him there. When once Russia has obtained a footing in Persia, with a plausible excuse, it does not require the gift of prophecy to tell the result. Russians advance—they do not retire. Russians like to see good order and peace on their frontiers but their Persian frontiers will be disturbed by positions. frontiers, but their Persian frontier will be disturbed by partisan warfare, and by gangs of robbers who will spring into existence on the sound of the war-cry. Accordingly, Russia must advance and quell these disturbances. We may fairly suppose that Isfahan will be a centre of revolt, being the former head-quarters of the Zil-i-Sultan, by this time in

There is the scheme: what other factors may appear when the problem comes to be worked out it is not for me to suggest. It will be interesting to see how far Russia is allowed to have her own way.

(Times of India.)

The blow has fallen at last, and the long-threatened Judge Advocate-General's Department has been reorganised. tary men in Bombay and Madras have lost their chance of tary men in Bombay and Madras have lost their chance of ever succeeding to what was generally allowed to be the pleasantest and most gentlemanly appointment in the Presidency—the post of Judge Advocate-General at Army Head Quarters. Although we have frequently pointed out in these columns that a reduction in the department was inevitable, and could not fail to be beneficial to the army at large, yet we can hardly help regretting that almost the last of the well-paid sineques has been thus unfealingly taken from officers who sinecures has been thus unfeelingly taken from officers who have not too many good appointments left to struggle for. The appointment of Judge Advocate-General was an almost ideal one. The salary was Rs. 2,200 a month. The qualifications were popularly supposed to be a little military law and a good deal of lawn tennis. Octacamund or Mahableshwur was the summer residence of the Judge Advocate-General, where he rested from his law labours and ate strawberries and cream. When the Commander-in-Chief was in difficulties on a question of law he referred to his Judge Advocate-General, who referred to his clerk, who had the whole thing at his fingers ends, and settled the question off-hand. But this pleasant and harmless appointment has been cut down by the ruthless shears of the Army Reformer, and Bombay and Madras will know their chief military advisers no more. In their place there will be only one Judge Advocate-General, for all India, at will be only one Judge Advocate-General, for all India, at Simla, with four Deputies and six Assistants. As regards this Presidency, Poona and Kurrachee are to be the only two stations where a Judge Advocate will reside, and Colonel Tyler, from the Bengal Presidency, goes to Poona as Deputy, while Colonel Prideaux, who has been many years at Poona, goes to Kurrachee as one of the six Assistant Judge-Advocates. We confess to a feeling of disappointment that Colonel Prideaux has got no advancement in the redistribution of the department. During the time that Colonel Prideaux has been Judge Advocate of the Poona circle he has been noted for his courtesy and willingness to impart information, while to the duties of his willingness to impart information, while to the duties of his office he brought unwearying diligence and sound judgment. In the ordinary course he would have succeeded Colonel Wardrop as Judge Advocate General of the Bombay Army, but, under the altered condition of things, he has had to make way for an officer from another Presidency. This is probably un-avoidable; but we trust that Colonel Prideaux will not remain long without the promotion he so richly deserves. the reorganisation as a whole, there is no doubt that it will do good; and the transfer of its officers from one Presidency to another will enlarge their minds, and give them juster views of the scope and bearing of military law. At present the general complaint of the service against the Judge Advocate's Department is that it devotes too much of its time to techni-Department is that it devotes too much of its time to technicalities that are trivial and confusing, and that it does not do as much as it might to make military law the simple and clear matter it ought to be. Let us hope that, under the new condition of things, this defect will be remedied, and larger and more comprehensive views adopted. It was always rumoured that the excessive love of detail, and the tendency to write elaborate memoirs that characterised the department, was largely owing to the Judge Advector not having much work. largely owing to the Judge Advocates not having much work to occupy their time. But with their reduced number this preponderance of leisure will no longer be their lot, and their time will of necessity be more taken up with essentials, and less with details, which will be a decided advantage.

an Act of George III., to enable the Viceroy of India, with the sanction of the Secretary of State, to give leave of absence to the Indian Commander-in Chief, to Indian Governors, and to members of the Council when it shall appear to him desirable to do so. The Standard informs us the object of the Bill is to prevent a repetition of the difficulty which arose last year in regard to the Duke of Connaught's visit to England to take part in the Jubilee festivities. The difficulty is not likely to again arise during the lifetime of the present generation. It is not quite clear what is meant by "to members of the Council." At present members of the Viceroy's Council and members of the Executive Councils of the two Presidencies can once take, on sick certificate, leave for six months during their tenure of office. Considering that the office is only for five years, and is very highly paid, this privilege seems sufficiently liberal. There are many grave and obvious objections to the Indian Commander-in-Chief leaving the country. No man can tell when a disturbance may break out in this vast Indian Empire. The acting man might be as strong as the permanent holder of the office; but at a crisis he would be hampered with the feeling that he was only a locum tenens. There are also grave objections to an Indian Governor being allowed the privilege of taking leave during his tenure of office. The first two years are spent in learning the intricacies of Indian administration and projecting reforms. After he has been a couple of years in India, he learns the important fact that the best thing he can do is to be content to go on governing well and continuously without initiating every month a new policy. Just as he has learnt this important lesson, he will by the new Bill be able to take six months' leave, and the ad interim chief will lutch at the opportunity of airing his pet crotchet. The want of continuity is a great drawback in our present administration, and the Bill proposed by the Under-Secretary of State for India will

AMUSEMENTS AT GNATONG. (Pioneer.)

The Lahore paper's correspondent with the Sikkim Field Force writes on the 12th:—"You have no idea how gay we can be here. We have had a cricket match and a gymkhana. The first was officers and non-commissioned officers against the World, and the former won by four wickets. I wonder if a match has ever before been played at this elevation, and it is certainly rather trying to run between the wickets up here at 12,000 feet. We had a 300 yards race of the gymkhana for all political followers, who started whooping and came in without a word to say for themselves and making dreadful faces. The All Horse Distance Handicap was great fun, Colonel Bromhead's capture Jeluksoo being evidently not yet educated up to gymkhanas. His rider had, to ride barebacked, as the saddle and stirrups were evidently not intended for anybody 'erect upon two legs and having all the outward semblance of a man.' Jeluksoo was given such a start that he was almost round the first corner before the others got the word to go. However, it was not a walking match, as Jeluksoo seemed to imagine, and he was rather outpaced. There has been great shikar lately among the golden and other eagles, of which there are numbers about here; and the spoils are doubtless intended by the slayers to adorn the halls of their ancestors when war's alarms shall cease."

EMPLOYMENT OF NATIVE INDUSTRY. (Bombay Gazette.)

Indian Engineering calls attention to the zeal for Native industry which the Government of India have shown in entrusting the furnishing of the Viceroy's Palace, at Simla, to Messrs. Maple and Co., of London. The incident deserves all the notice that can be taken of it, if only for the fine opportunity that it gives for reviving discussions on technical education, about which Governments have been silent of late, and of which the newspapers in their dullest season have not spoken. It may be worth while to say, however, that the Government are not entirely without excuse. They have cut their coat according to their cloth, and cloth, as we all know, has run short enough of late in the Government store-room. We believe that one at least of the better known Indian art furniture makers had the opportunity of competing for the work, but the limitation was so low—Rs. 10,000 it is said—that accomplished gentleman left the field to Tottenham-court-road, the margin allowed being scarcely wide enough to allow of such work being given as Bombay art furniture has gained its reputation with. This is economy, it is true, and Messrs. Maple can do good work. It is like free trade, too, to buy in the cheapest market. But the introduction of the products of Tottenham-court-road into India does not provide us with "object lessons" in Indian art which it might have been worth while to get while we were about it, nor is it exactly in this way that Government who wish to foster industries at their doors usually go to work. Free trade is one thing, the revival of local arts is another, and the maxims of the Cobden Club, even when illustrated by Maple and Co.'s catalogue, are of small value in that connection. There is room for complaint in the incident, which comes in disappointing sequence to many attempts to exhibit the zeal of the British authorities for the censervation of all that is beautiful in Indian arts and industries. But it will not have been wasted if it set us talking about technical education once more, and our talking lead to something different from orders on home producers.

THE MADRAS CHRISTIAN COLLEGE. (Indian Daily News.)

The Madras Hindoos may establish a College where the virtues and advantages of Brahminism are sedulously inculcated, if they choose. It is only a matter of finding the money—and competent teaching agency. The fees paid by the students of the Madras Christian College go but a small way towards meeting the cost of maintaining the institution, which is defrayed chiefly from missionary funds, subscribed through the Free Church of Scotland. As a missionary institution—a means of gaining converts to Christianity—the College is evidently a sham. The money of the pious Scotch people who support it, instead of helping to make Christians, goes to afford Hindooism, or at least of caste, upon them, renders them more formidable as opponents of Christianity. The Hindoos of Madras are wealthy enough, if they have the zeal, to do for their own community what the Scotch Free Church Christians have hitherto been doing for them; and it will be more honourable of them to undertake this task, instead of accepting aid from another religion under a species of false pretence. The money for the talked-of National College ought to be forthcoming. Perhaps the chief difficulty will be to obtain effective teaching agency. But after so much has been done for so many years, to foster and further the cause of high education, the promoters of the scheme ought to be able to find competent manufacturers of graduates without going outside the ranks of their co-religionists. If they cannot, what is to be said for the policy which has expended public money so freely upon higher educations for a generation past? We may then, if there is reality in the professed deep concern of Hindoos for their religion, see a Hindoo College established at Madras, managed and worked by Hindoo funds. Such an institution would at least be sailing under true colours, which the Madras Christian college at present is not. There is a false pretence on both sides. The College pretends to its supporters of the College at home in Scotland regard as the darkness of Hindooism.

THE BLIGHT ON OOTACAMUND. (South of India Observer.)

We did, like many others interested in the Nilgiris, expect great things from the presence of a large number of official visitors with the Governor and the Commander-in-Chief. We anticipated that they would prove a nucleus around which the non-official world gather for purposes of mutual recreation; that the combined forces would bring money into the district, stimulate trade and bestow the thousand and one indirect benefits which a well-to-do community could and does ordinarily confer upon a Sanitarium or watering place. In these anticipations we have been cruelly disappointed. The official has acted rather as a repellant than an attractive force of cohesion; the non-official avoids him as much as possible, and even the mofussil official cares not to associate with him during this brief sojourn on the Hills. The latter hates to live in buckram and do his devoirs out of season, and he accordingly prefers a summer retreat where he will be at his ease. Moreover, the spirit of economy that pervades all classes of officials of the present day excuses entertaining, on the plea that the necessaries for that purpose have been left behind in the permanent home at the Presidency. Trade from this and other causes has languished, old and established institutions are tottering or have gradually disappeared, credit has vanished and the Hills have arrived at a stage of stagnation and depression unknown at any period of their previous history. All this we have no hesitation in ascribing to the presence of the Government, Civil and Military, in the station. Let us take a momentary glance at a few of our social surroundings to illustrate these remarks; and first in order let us consider the entertainments at Government House. The public, must of course, pay their respects to Her Majesty's representative, but the duty is rendered as little agreeable as possible either from those entrusted with the management of the courtesies of Government House being above their work or from their not understanding it. To an "officer and a gentleman" the ordinary functions of an A.D.C. may not be pleasant, but the pay and perquisites are liberal, and disagreeables must be pocketed. To retort on the public by an attitude or neglect or inattention is not the best way of discharging disagreeable duties and overcoming the humiliation of the situation. Again, private entertainments are few and far between, but even these are being choked off by ostentatious officialism. One of the most enjoyable of non-official entertainments in Ootacamund was marred last year by insistence on Viceregal honours being paid to one of the guests. Not content with usurping the entire regulation of sports, recreations an

BENGAL.

THE preliminary inquiry at Calcutta into the loss of the ship Ganges has resulted in charges being framed against the captain of negligence and misconduct.

Here is the list of liquors that found their way into Calcutta last year:—Champagne, 20,497 gallons, priced at Rs. 4,14,493; claret, 37,284 gallons, at Rs. 2,04,643; port, 19,184 gallons, at Rs. 1,76,886; sherry, 15,655 gallons, at Rs. 1,32,092; other wines and liquers, 28,976 gallons, at Rs. 2,53,371. This makes up the respectable total of nearly twelve lakhs worth of wines and liqueurs.

THE accounts of the sea-borne trade of Bengal for the past year show a total increase of some 212 lakhs. The aggregate value of exports and imports amounted to about 70\(^3\) crores, a figure which has been only once exceeded. The increase in the year's trade shows itself everywhere except in coasting imports. As to details, one of the most satisfactory points in the accounts is the marked recovery in the trade with Australia, which had been steadily falling since 1882-83, but last year showed the largest proportionate advance of the trade with any foreign country. It is especially gratifying to find that the exports of Indian produce to Australia rose by over 113 per cent. The trade with America and Germany also shows a noteworthy increase, and Russia with her kerosine cell imports is beginning to figure in the list; but Belgium, with which a considerable trade had of late years been springing up, records a marked decline.

MADRAS.

EFFORTS are being made in Ootacamund to supply that Sanatarium with a model English farm on an extensive scale. Above two thousand grafted apple and other cultivated trees have been procured from England, and this, if successful, will, in a great measure, cut out the ill-bred and fleshless fruits that are now sold and purchased in the local market. More than this, a thousand head of cattte of the reputed Nellore breed have also been imported, to supply the want of a suitable dairy, which has long been felt. The site chosen lies on the eastern slope of the plateau of Ootacamund, between Dodabetta and Ootacamund proper, and encloses a large and extensive plot of land.

THE Mysore Government have made an allotment of Rs.28,74,000 for the Public Works of the Province for 1888-89, being Rs.4,15,000 more than that of the last official year. The abstract of expenditure heads is as follows:—Original works Rs.16,78,800; repairs, Rs.6,77,900. The largest provision is made for Irrigation Works, on which Rs.9,65,000 are to be apent, which provides also for roads and for two bridges across the Tungabudra at Balehonnur. Both will be of great benefit to the planting districts of Kodar and Shimoga.

We have been informed, says the Madras Mail, that as soon as Lord Connemara heard that the ships of the P. and O. Company were not to call at Madras he wrote to the chairman of the company to express his great regret at the decision, for obvious reasons, which he stated. In answer to this the company have lately written to his Excellency to explain that detentions at Madras were very great, to say nothing of the risks of entering and leaving the harbour. In consequence of this delay much trade was being lost between London and Calcutta. As a case in point the company instanced that the Khedive on her last outward passage omitted to call at Madras, and did the journey between London and Calcutta in thirty-one days, while on the return journey, when she called at Madras, she took thirty-five days. The company have also informed his Excellency that passengers from Madras to London are given railway tickets to Bombay, and a passage home, for the price paid by Bombay passengers of the sea voyage alone, thus giving Madras passengers a railway ticket gratis. But his Excellency pointed out that it was not a question of inconvenience to passengers alone, but of injury to the port and commerce of Madras.

BOMBAY.

THE Sirdar Diler Jung has arrived in Bombay, and is now staying at the Esplanade Hotel.

Mr. Geary, who resigned his seat in the Town Council on proceeding to Europe two years since, has been asked, and has consented, to stand for the seat rendered vacant by the untimely death of Sir Frank Souter.

SIR WALTER DE SOUZA, the representative of the fund of the Mazagon School, having decided the dispute in favour of the Bishop of Damaun, under whose charge the funds have been placed, his Lordship will open the school at Mazagon, on the 17th inst., which is the anniversary of the Bishop's arrival in Bombay.

The death has occurred at Indore of Rai Bahadur Ganga Charan Dass, who was head accountant in the Residency Office till 1882, when he retired on a well-earned pension from Government. During the Mutiny the deceased rendered valuable services, which were appreciated by the Government of India by the conferment upon him of the title of Rai Bahadur. He was an old gentleman of retiring habits, and he enjoyed the confidence of Sir Henry Daly and Sir Lepel Griffin.

DACOITY is flourishing in Kattywar. The local paper tells us that on the night of the 28th ult. the Jamnagar State mail, on its way from Khambalia to Rawalgaum, was intercepted at Bhada by dacoits, who tore up all documents, and, replacing them in the bags, asked the carrier to hand them to the Diwan Saheb. On a subsequent evening a passenger-tonga on its way from Jetpore to Rajkot was attacked by a couple of dacoits armed with clubs. The assailants attacked the driver with the clubs, but he drove on at a furious pace. The robbers, finding themselves baffled in their attempts, clung to the vehicle from behind. This having been noticed by the coachman, he lashed both of them severely enough to compel them to desist. On reaching the police chowkie the passengers knocked at the door to inform the peons of what had occurred, but they slept peacefully inside, and did not think it worth their while to trouble about the attack.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES, OUDH AND PUNJAB

Colonel Steel, R.E., who was recently gazetted as Secretary to the North-West Provinces Government in the Public Works Department, having taken six months' leave, Mr. T. H. Wickes, from Bengal, will officiate in the interval. Mr. J. G. Glass, now on leave at home, succeeds Mr. White as Superintending Engineer at Hyderabad, Mr. Stonye, of the State Railways, acting until his return.

A TERRIFIC storm swept over Benares and immediate district on Thursday evening, June 7th, doing immense damage. It was short in duration but most disastrous in its effects. The beautiful Memorial Gardens suffered greatly, and now present a sad spectacle. Trees and bushes lie about in all directions, and the iron fencing has been destroyed by trunks and heavy boughs falling on them. Many houses were wholly or partially dismantled, and numbers of huts were literally swept away. The city has suffered more than the station, and it will be surprising if no loss of life has occurred there. No fatal casualties have, however, yet been reported, though a great many Natives were injured. At the mills some roofs of the boiler sheds were torn away, and the heavy sheeting carried a considerable distance. The owners of fruit gardens will be extensive losers, as their property was almost devastated by the storm, which many old residents describe as of unprecedented violence. Miles of roadway were obstructed by fallen trees.

The thunder, whilst it lasted, was just like discharges of heavy artillery, and the lightning was very vivid. Railway communication was impeded for a time through the confusion caused by injury to the telegraph wires. The havoc wrought will fall heavily on the Municipality, which will have its work cut out for the next few weeks in putting things to rights.

BURMA.

LIEUTENANT TRAVERS, with a movable column composed of the Kubo Police Battalion and a detachment of the 44th Goorkha Light Infantry and guns, reached Kalemyo on the 26th ult. Orders from Major Gleig have been issued for the column to remain at Kalemyo for the present. Major Gleig, with his column, is at Indin; and the pretended Shwegyopyo Prince with 200 followers, mostly men from the Yaw country, is said to be at Khinging ten miles north-west of Indin is said to be at Khingine, ten miles north-west of Indin.

FRESH WATER AT RAWUL PINDI.

Dr. TANNER asked the Under-Secretary of State for India whether the Native inhabitants of the city of Rawul Pindi were, in consequence of the energy of the Commissioner, Colonel Parry Nisbet, now supplied with fresh water at all seasons of the year, which was brought from the River Rawul by pipes laid underground, a distance of seven miles, into the city: whether it were that the contournment distance of the contournment of the contournme by pipes laid underground, a distance of seven miles, into the city; whether it were true that the cantonments, distant about a mile from the city, were obliged to draw water from wells the majority of which ran dry in the hot season; whether any recommendations had been made suggesting the extension of the water supply to the cantonments, and, if so, for what reasons had they not been carried into effect; and whether steps would be taken at an early period to give the large body of troops stationed at the cantonments the great benefit already conferred upon the Native inhabitants of the city.

THE CASE OF MR. TAYLER OF PATNA.

THE CASE OF MR. TAYLER OF PATNA.

Mr. J. Maclean asked the Under-Secretary for India whether he was aware that after Mr. Tayler, ex-Commissioner of Patna, had declined the inquiry offered him into his judicial conduct at Patna, Lord Canning nevertheless insisted, in the interest of public justice, that an inquiry should he held in certain cases connected with the Patna riots, and called upon the Sudder Court of Bengal to revise the sentences passed by Mr. Tayler on persons who still remained alive, in order to remedy substantial injustice where such should appear to have been committed; that the Sudder Court accordingly, on the 29th of June, 1859, forwarded to the Government of Bengal a judgment which the Court had recorded after an examination of the papers; and whether a copy of the judicial record tion of the papers; and whether a copy of the judicial record of proceedings in that case would be laid upon the table of by the hon. member for North Kensington.

Sir J. Gorst: My attention has been called to a letter from the Registrar of the Sudder Court to the Government of Bengal of June 29, 1859, forwarding a judgment of that Court on the cases of twenty-one persons then alive who had been tried and convicted by Mr. William Tayler for complicity in the Patna riots of July 3, 1857. After carefully going through the records of the trials, the Court thought the evidence altogether insufficient. cient to sustain the conviction of eighteen of the prisoners. In another case the Court thought the evidence unsatisfactory, and recommended that his sentence should be remitted. In the two remaining cases the conviction was upheld. There is no objection to the production of these documents if the hon. member will move for them.

Family remittances are regulated solely by the regimental or substantive rank, and not by the brevet or local rank of the officer; but an officer obtaining higher honorary or relative rank which carries increase of pay may remit to the extent fixed for combatant officers of the same rank.

An officer promoted can remit the difference between the sums allowed for his old and new rank. The annual amount allowed for each grade may be remitted either by instalments allowed for each grade may be remitted either by instalments or in one sum, in any month of the current official year, i.e., between April 1st and March 31st ensuing. Remittances of all officers and men drawing their pay for March in that month will be governed by the rate of exchange of the closing year, but all remittances of officers and men drawing their pay for March in April will be made at the rates of exchange pay for March in April will be made at the rates of exchange for the opening year.

If an officer have no occasion to avail himself during the currency of an official year of the privilege of remitting the amount allowed for the year, or any portion of it, it cannot be remitted in a subsequent year. When an officer serving in India is permitted to draw in England any good service or wound pension, or other special allowances, the sum he so receives in England is to be deducted from the amount he would otherwise be allowed to remit by his rank; but the pay of an aide-de-camp to the Sovereign will, if required, be issued of an aide-de-camp to the Sovereign will, if required, be issued in England without reference to the amount which the officer may be entitled to remit under the rules.

Messrs. Layton and Co. write on Indian and Coylon Tea:—Sales for the week amount to 2,601 packages of Indian, and 7,404 packages of Ceylon, making a total of 10,005 packages. The tone this week is rather less depressed, and where the quality marked any improvement prices have been comparatively steady. New scason's Darjeeling being poor in cup sold at moderate rates, as did Ceylon Tea, except for the better grades, which met more competition.

Messrs. William, James, and Henry Thompsou's Ceylon Tea Memorandum says:—Since the 17th inst. about 14,060 packages freshly imported, and several hundred chests of re-printed Tea have been brought to auction, and nearly all bought by the trade. The late arrivals have contained little fine Tea, a fair quantity of average make and quality, and rather more than the usual proportion of low grade with undesirable liquor. The low range of price, however, has stimulated trade—dull as the other markets are—and there has not been further material decline although rates are weak for inferior Broken lated trade—dull as the other markets are—and there has not been further material decline, although rates are weak for inferior Broken Pekoes. The inquiry for good Tea is distinctly spreading, and a few sales this week of parcels with thick heavy liquor—the sort most wanted at the moment—show a recovery. As far as we can learn, dealers have no fine Ceylon, and very little fine Indian, in stock, so that there is prospect of brisk competition for the quality which will doubtless come when planters have been more favoured by weather.

Messrs. George White and Co. report that the China Tea market has continued quiet during the past week, but with rather more inquiry occasionally for common to fair Black and Red Leafs, which have ruled steady at the auction sales. The better grades have sold at drooping rates, owing to the near approach of New Season's. Sales of New Makes have been small, and prices firm. There is not much change to notice in Scented Green Teas, the best liquoring parcels are mostly in request. With regard to Indian, only 1,100 packages of Old Season's have been offered during the week, and in consequence of the quiet state of trade many lots were withdrawn, owing to the bids being below importers' ideas. About 1,400 packages of the newcrop, from several districts, were brought to auction on the 21st, when Teas with fair quality and flavour met with attention fr.m buyers, but undesirable parcels were neglected, and sold at comparatively low rates. Ceylon: Public sales have totalled 7,400 packages, against 8,100 packages last week. The quality generally has been again disappointing, and the auctions have passed, on the whole, with a dull tone, and at rather irregular rates, chiefly in buyers' favour. The few desirable invoices brought forward have continued to realise comparatively good prices, on account of the increasing demand for Teas with full flavour; owing, however, to the abundant supply of parcels with good loaf but prices, on account of the increasing demand for feas with full flavour; owing, however, to the abundant supply of parcels with good leaf but inferior cup, the market for these descriptions has gradually fallen during the past few weeks, until a decline of about 1d. per 1b. has been established on Pekoes and Broken Pekoes, and ½d. to ¾d. per 1b. o. Pekoe Souchongs. The average for the past week is about 1dd. per 1b. Java: In the absence of sales there is no business to advise, but about 1.000 packages are printed for part week. but about 1,000 packages are printed for next week.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

SKETCHES IN PROSE AND VERSE.*

A love of nature and of home pervades all the pages of this interesting volume. Alike in prose as in verse Mr. Doveton seems to revel in the charms of scenery in the company of those near and dear to him. Himself apart in spirit from the busy haunts of men, he inspires his readers with a love of the solitude which he is prone to worship. There is, too, an intense yearning after the Infinite. The spirits of Eternity seem to whisper the mysteries of an Unseen World. What can be sweeter than the lines from the poem entitled, "Voices of Nature!"

" To breathe the same ambrosial air As angels, and to bringthe sky Above a sea of melody, Without the shadow of a care!

To hear the choral stars sublime Sing o'er a ransomed universe-To feel the first primeval curse Has perished with the Tyrant Time!

Oh! tried and troubled mortal, say If this is dying thou art blest Is there no yearning in thy breast To plume thy pinions and away?"

Or again --

"Soul! I know they brought her hither Sleeping sweetly, long ago, Ere the leaves began to wither,
In the soft, September glow.

But I cannot—cannot—wake her. But I cannot—cannot—wake her, So in vain the solemn quest, In the mansions of her Maker She has found Eternal rest!

It were easy to multiply quotations, but it is needless. Enough has been excerpted to indicate that Mr. Doveton is a "sweet lisper." His poetry touches the feelings, it raises, it depresses, but it never offends. Time passes pleasantly; and if there be no great "profit" there is, at any rate, no "loss." Poetry does not, as a rule, aim higher than an appeal to the imagination, and this object successfully accomplished, as in the present instance, criticism is dumb, and praise is master of the situation.

AN ANALYSIS OF WIT AND HUMOUR.+

It has been said that there is no such thing as a synonym. The assertion is rather wide in its scope, but at any rate Mr. Fleet seems impressed by its truth, for he has entered the lists rieet seems impressed by its truth, for he has entered the lists charged with the mission of analysing the difference between "wit and humour." But the task is by no means easy of accomplishment. First of all, what is wit? To this no very satisfactory answer can be given. It is simple enough to say that such and such a saying is very witty, but to give a precise definition of the term is far from easy. To describe humour is, perhaps, less difficult. The word seems to embrace a sense of the ludicrous. We lead to that is humorous but this is not the ludicrous. We laugh at what is humorous, but this is not necessarily the case as regards wit. The risible faculties need not be—nay, are not, in many cases—affected by a witty remark. These few observations are intended to give some idea of the matter which Mr. Fleet has taken in hand. He pursues his researches with unwearied diligence, illustrating his argument by an endless variety of examples. Our chief doubt is as the need of such an elaborate dissertation in research to a custom of the need of such an elaborate dissertation in research to a custom of the need of such an elaborate dissertation in research to a custom of the need of such an elaborate dissertation in research to a custom of the need of such an elaborate dissertation in research to a custom of the need of such an elaborate dissertation in research. the need of such an elaborate dissertation in regard to a question which does not seem altogether worthy of so much labour. But for those who think otherwise the "Analysis" assuredly does not err in incompleteness or minute elaboration. The reader is rather bewildered with minute subtleties, and over-whelmed with deep unfathomable arguments, which are whelmed with deep unfathomable arguments, caviare to the ordinary average intelligence.

PLAIN TALES FROM THE HILLS.

The dedication of Mr. Kipling's work is "to the wittiest woman in India." The inferential humour on the part of the work thus laid out at the feet of the possessor of a like virtue is well sustained in the various stories which flit across the stage of amusement. Of course Indian tales to be thoroughly pricated must be read in the Fact amidst the scenes to which enjoyed must be read in the East, amidst the scenes to which they relate, and by persons familiar with the thousand and one terms which, crude and incomprehensible as they are to the

Mr. Kipling possesses the art of telling a story--a gift with-Mr. Kipling possesses the art of telling a story—a gift without which no person is fit to cater for the public taste in the direction of anecdote. A good tale badly told is spoilt—the vigour, the point, the charm, consists as much in manner as in matter. Fortunately the volume entitled "Plain Tales from the Hills" is rich in both requisites. They sparkle with fun, they are full of life, merriment, and humour. As a rule minth recording there is at times a pathetic strain, but this fun, they are full of life, merriment, and humour. As a rule mirth-provoking, there is at times a pathetic strain, but this soon passes, and laughter—as the Yankees say, side-splitting laughter—is the order of the day. It would not be easy to single out specimens as being unusually attractive, for there is scarce a page but what merits perusal. There are skits at persons of note, sly allusions to the mysterious ways of officials in high places, and covert attacks on the peculiarities of a great Government. The mirror of satire reflects all and everything; pothing escapes and the result is one of the most sparkling. nothing escapes, and the result is one of the most sparkling, witty, and droll collection of tales which could be well conceived. India can appreciate, but England can laugh.

THE GREVILLE MEMOIRS.*

The fifth volume of the "Greville Memoirs," which embraces the period from 1841 to 1846, touches upon a variety of most interesting matters. In the Budget of 1842 a new feature of taxation was introduced in the shape of the Income-tax, an impost which, from that day to this, through good report and ill report, has remained an incubus upon the middle and upper classes of the community. Like "the old man of the sea," it clings to them with a pertinacity which no opposition has succeeded in remaining and no discontent has received in selections. ceeded in removing, and no discontent has resulted in abolishing. Its appearance at the time was overshadowed by the awful disaster in Afghanistan, when but one solitary survivor escaped the massacre of upward of 5,000 of his fellow-countrymen in the passes of that treacherous and unfortunate country.

men in the passes of that treacherous and unfortunate country. By far the most interesting portions of the diary, however, are those which relate to the position and proceedings of Sir Robert Peel, whose Free Trade proclivities found expression in his famous repeal of the Corn-laws. The Conservative party never forgave their leader this apostasy from the tenets of "Protection," which formed the political gospel of by far the greater portion of the country gentlemen of those days. His position was beset with difficulties; and if Mr. Greville rightly guaged the inner workings of the great statesman's soul "the whole of the man's life was spent in doing enormous mischief and in attempts to repair that mischief." It will be mischief and in attempts to repair that mischief." It will be a curious biography "whenever it comes to be written, but not a creditable one."

There are, of course, a variety of interesting passages relative to the leading personages of the political world, such as O'Connell, the Irish agitator, and the precursor of the Healys, the Dillons, and hoc genus omne; the Duke of Wellington, of whom, en passant, it is stated that he never lost agun during the whole of his correct Directly into the contract. whom, en passant, it is stated that he never lost a gun during the whole of his career; Disraeli, just beginning to attain eminence in the House, of which in late years he was the brightest ornament; John Bright, Lord Ellenborough, Graham, Gladstone, Clarendon, Dalhousie, and a host of others, too numerous for enumeration. Taken as a whole, this is perhaps the most interesting volume of the series which has as yet -appeared.

Colonel W. F. B. Laurie has brought out a second series of his "Sketches of Some Distinguished Anglo-Indiana" (W. H. Allen and Co.), which will be welcomed by many readers as a valuable addition to the first series. In the present volume the author gives the biographies of several well-known and honoured Anglo-Indians, such as Sir Auckland Colvin, Sir John Morris, Sir Joseph Fayrer, Colonel Malleson, of whom there is a very life-like portrait as a frontispiece, and the late Sir Ashley Eden. There are brief notices of many other distinguished officials who have done the State service in the East. The task has evidently been a labour of love to the East. The task has evidently been a labour of love to the compiler, and Colonel Laurie may be congratulated in having produced a valuable work which was much wanted, and which no Anglo-Indian's library can be considered complete without.

The Art Journal for July contains a very charming etching of Mr. Sadler's picture known as "Thursday." "American Wonderland," too, supplies some fascinating subjects for illustration, while the mouth waters at the bare mention of the superb palaces, and still more superb furniture therein, of the late King of Bavaria. The Special Number illustrates the Glasgow Exhibition, and judging by the charming pictures the Special Speci here given, visitors to the Scotch centre of industry will have no occasion to regret the time and money spent in seeing a sight which London alone, and perhaps not that capital, could rival or surpass.

The Illustrated Naval and Military Magazine for July (W. H. Allen and Co.) continues to improve under the hands of its present editor, his own contributions forming a valuable of its present editor, his own contributions forming a valuable addition to the interesting and varied series of articles given to the reader. Amongst the other excellent papers in the present number may be mentioned Admiral Ingram's "Letters from California and the West Coast of Mexico," Major Parry's "Sketches of a Yachting Cruise," and the "Wanderings of a War Artist," by Irving Montagu. The papers are, as usual, freely illustrated and a new feature is introduced in the shape freely illustrated, and a new feature is introduced in the shape of a paper, in French, "Vive l'Angleterre!" from the pen of Jean De Berthouan.

The Century Magazine for July is, perhaps, the best which has appeared for some time—a fact due in great part to the admirable article on Sinai, Lichfield Cathedral, and the career of the Confederate ram Albemarle. The last-mentioned of these is especially interesting, throwing light as it does upon the use of "rams" in actual warfare.

Artistic Japan is a new monthly serial, designed to set forth in its true colours the arts and industries of the country whose name it bears. It is ably and carefully edited, and the illustrations are effective and executed with skill.

THE CHINA TEA TRADE.—A correspondence is also published regarding the China Tea Trade. The Consul at Canton forwards minutes of the meeting of the committee appointed to wards minutes of the infecting of the committee report that unless China teas are put on an equal footing with Indian teas by the abolition of all likin and export duties consummation is scarcely to be looked for; a serious decline, if not an utter extinction, of the trade is probable.

THE BIRTHDAY GAZETTE.—An Allahabad paper says: "We are glad, too, to notice that the Government has taken this opportunity to recognise the services of its Volunteer officers. At the same time we cannot but think that the Government might have made a more deserving selection among the officers of that service. There are many others than Lieut.-Colonel Walker at Simla or Lieut.-Colonel Lawrence at Allahabad whom, on account of longer and more successful commands, Indian Volunteers would have more gladly welcomed for this present mark of distinction.

THE funeral of Sir Frank H. Souter took place at St. Thomas's Church at Ooty, June 7. H.E. the Governor, desirous of all honour being accorded to the remains of so distinguished a public servant and a personal friend of old standing, was chief mourner. H.E. the Commander-in-Chief, Sir Charles Sargent, the Personal Staffs of the Governor and Commander-in-Chief, Army Headquarters Staff, Members of the Council, Secretaries to Government, Heads of Departments, Inspector-General of Police, officers and the general ments, Inspector-General of Police, officers and the general society of Ooty were present. The Nilgiri Volunteers, of which body the Governor is the honorary Colonel, paraded the deceased's house, and preceded the cortège to Church. The massed bands of the Governor and Volunteers played the "Dead March in Saul." A party of the Royal Fusiliers from Wellington, specially ordered by the Commander-in-Chief, met the procession and took the coffin to the Church. The road was lined by the police. At the Church the procession was met by the Bishop and the Chaplain; the Chaplain conducted the service at the Church, and the Bishop at the grave. The ceremony throughout was very impressive The ceremony throughout was very impressive.

THE INDIAN TEA INDUSTRY.

THE Indian tea planters are at length wakening up to the necessity of doing something to help themselves. When the tea industry was first started in India it was looked upon as a splendid and certain business, leading not only to fortune, but to "wealth beyond the dreams of avarice." All who had the means to buy gardens or invest in tea shares made haste to The speculators who bought what were called "gardens," but which were in many instances little better than waste lands with a few tea plants on them here and there, did excellently well by turning their ventures into limited liability companies, taking part of the amount which they asked for their bargain in cash down, and the remainder in shares, the "cash down' generally representing a very handsome profit on the original purchase money. The speculators who went in only for shares, and the bona fide investors who did likewise, did not altogether fare so well as the more enterprising individuals who bought and sold "gardens." These were the wise men of the East, who, taking credit to themselves for being the pioneers of a new industry, took also good care to get out of it with profit to themselves as quickly as possible. And so it came to pass that a change came over the golden dreams of wealth, and heavy losses took the place of anticipated profits. For many years past shareholders in many of the companies floated in the manner we have described had a very bad time of it, but the cloud which shadowed their prospects had still a silver lining, which we are glad to believe it is turning to the light. The demand for Indian teas is increasing in England, and the deliveries, including those from Ceylon, show this present season that the demand is likely to increase, until Indian teas take the place which China teas once held in the home markets. But Indian tea growers have yet much to do before this consummation is reached. The public taste in England has not yet been thoroughly educated to appreciate fully the good qualities of the many good Indian teas, and for the very simple reason that it is not so easy to obtain pure unadulterated Indian teas from English grocers. Persons who can afford to purchase a chest of tea can always make certain of getting the real article that they want by going to a respectable tea merchant, but the poorer classes of the community, who have to buy in small quantities, are at the mercy of the retail grocer, who makes his own "blend" and sells it as Indian tea. Why the planters and those who are pecuniarily interested in the Indian tea industry have not taken some combined action to protect themselves and securing for the tea drinking community in England pure Indian teas is a mystery which is perhaps known only to themselves and to the Mincing. lane brokers. The Ceylon planters are, moreover; showing more energy and unity of purpose than their brother planters on the Indian mainland, and they are already reaping the advantages of such action, for the demand for Ceylon teas is greatly on the increase in England. But there are other fields besides England for the expansion of the Indian tea industry. There is Australia and there is America. An experiment is about to be tried on a considerable scale of introducing Indian teas to our Trans-Atlantic cousins, and if the experiment. be wisely conducted there is every prospect of ultimate success. But we regret to hear that already there are: divided counsels amongst the planters themselves, and this want of unison may retard the development of the industry in America, as it doubtless has retarded its development here.

THE "Fourth" was of course, writes the Simla correspondent of the Pioneer, a day on which all old Etonians turned their thoughts to that school which still flourishes in all its vigour among the green fields of the mother country. Sir Frederick Roberts gave his annual dinner at Snowdon, and the Etonians present as guests were:—Lord Dufferin, Mr. Justice Bayley, Sir Frederick Hogg, Colonel Pole-Carew, Colonel Gerald Morton, Captain Heathcote, Mr. Bicknell, Mr. Houston, and Mr. Roberts, son of the Commander-in-Chief. After dinner there Roberts, son of the Commander-in-Chief. After dinner there was a small-and-early dance in the ball-room, preceded by a musical sketch, in which Captain Hobday, single-handed, kept his auditors immensely amused, while he related how Mr. and Mrs. Adolphus Brown kept their Silver Wedding. The same evening General Chesney gave a dinner to all Royal Engineer officers present in Simla, upwards of twenty accepting his invitation to gather in honour of the "Corps." The "Sappers" muster strongly in Simla this year, from senior officers holding high official appointments to those juniors who are working hard at "Defence" plans which have not yet hear fully comhard at "Defence" plans which have not yet been fully com-

BOMBAY AND BARODA RAILWAY.

Major-General J. S. Trevor presided at the Cannon-street Hotel over the half-yearly general meeting of the pro-prietors in the Bombay, Baroda, and Central India Railway Company.—The report of the directors recommended the pay-Company.—The report of the directors recommended the payment of a dividend in July of 1s. 6d. per £100 consolidated stock, making, with the guaranteed interest, a total distribution for the half-year on the capital stock of £2 11s. 6d. per cent. The proprietors would then have received £6 10s. per cent. on their holdings of stock for the year 1887, as against £7 2s. for 1886, and £6 17s. 6d. for 1885.—The Chairman moved the adoption of the report. He stated that the hold them to artisiste at their matrical lest Chairt that, as he led them to anticipate at their meeting last Christmas, they were enabled to pay 1s. 6d. per cent. beyond the guaranteed interest. They nad cleared their guaranteed interests on their own line, and were only about £3,500 short of the sum they had to pay each half-year for the Rajputana-Malway Railway before they began to divide surplus profits. The result was more satisfactory than he had hoped for, with The result was more satisfactory than he had hoped for, with a falling-off in gross earnings, compared with the corresponding half of 1886, on their own line, of close on 20 per cent, and on the Rajputana-Malwa Railway of about 12 per cent. Part of these results were due to a reduction in maintenance and repair charges, caused by some delay in the despatch of rails and other stores to India. The cause of the falling-off of the revenue was that the crops in the Punjab partially failed for want of seasonable rain, and there was nothing to export. There had been another failure of the harvest, this time not in the Punjab, but in the North-West Provinces and Rajputana. Grain that would otherwise have been available for export ard swelled the receipts on their own line, had been absorbed in Rajputana and the North-West. own line, had been absorbed in Rajputana and the North West. In the aggregate they had earned more money, both gross and net in this half-year than in the corresponding half of 1887, but the increase in their receipts had been on the Rajputana-Malwa Railway, where they took one fifth of the surplus, while the decrease had been over their own line, where they took half. The result was that, with an aggregate revenue somewhat in the result was that the result was the result was the re excess of the revenue from the corresponding half of 1887, they would have a smaller surplus to divide at Christmas, and they would have probably to get home that surplus at a lower rate of exchange. The effect of that would be that they would not be able to give as much as £1 8s. 6d. over and above their guaranteed interest, as they did in 1887; but there would be a reduction in it of about 2s. 6d. per cent. The deficiency due to the failure of crops had been aggravated by the enhancement of 25 per cent. in the salt duties, which had caused a temporary decrease in the consumption of that article, and that had told on them, as they were perhaps the largest carriers of salt in India. The cotton crop had also not come up to expectation. In other respects they had done fairly well, and they had nothing to despair about. They would be all right again, he hoped, before long, though he feared the coming half year would not be as bright as some that had gone before it. He afterwards alluded at some length to the question of competition for traffic with other railways.—The excess of the revenue from the corresponding half of 1887, they question of competition for traffic with other railways.—The motion was seconded by Mr. S. J. Wilde and agreed to and the dividend having also been agreed to, the meeting closed in the usual way.

· CHINESE IN AUSTRALASIA.

A Sydney correspondent, writing to the St. James's Gazette on this A Sydney correspondent, writing to the St. James's Gazette on this question, says the answer to the outcry in Australia against the Chinese is to be found in the feelings entertained by their white brethren in Australia towards such of the Mongolian race as have found their way thither. To understand fully the depth and intensity of those feelings ore would need to be brought into somewhat close contact with the Chinese—not in their own country, but in their character of Australian citizens. That an ancient nation with a widely differing civilisation from our own should bave certain peculiar habits of life neither surprises nor disgusts us. But let the same which different gertilisation from our own should have certain peculiar habits of life neither surprises nor disgusts us. But let the same habits and customs be introduced amongst us, and the matter assumes a totally different aspect. Whatever picturesqueness the Mongolian may seem to have at home is entirely lost. Though sharing the rights and most of the privileges of his white brethren, he remains among them a member of an alien race. He lives with them, but he is not one of them. He has no powers of assimilation. He may adopt European habits and customs, but he remains a Mongolian still. Even a change of dress alters his appearance in a much slighter degree than would be thought possible. Physiologically, even more than psychologically, he is unfitted to assimilate with a type so different from his own as the European. Strange to say, he has the power of assimilating, what we, at least, consider the nobler type to his own; for physiologically, a half-caste Mongolian is as purely Mongolian as his father. I have seen numerous results of the union between Chinamen and European women, and in every case the mother's race was entirely absorbed in that of the father. In the arms of a woman with red hair, blue eyes, and freekled fair complexion, you may see a child with absorbed in that of the father. In the arms of a woman with red hair, blue eyes, and freckled fair complexion, you may see a child with the straight coarse black hair, slanting black eyes, and yellow skin, that unmistakably proclaim the Mongol. In the dissimilarity between the European and Mongolian races lies the secret of the antipathy entertained by the former towards the latter. The Chinese are looked upon with extreme disfavour by the labouring The Chinese are looked upon with extreme disfavour by the labouring classes as affecting the labour market. Though physically inferior to the workman of British origin, the Mongolian by his steady industry and the fact that he is content to work for wages that are considered incapable of supporting the white workman, has succeeded in many cases in driving all other competitors out of the field. So far, however, the competition has been confined within somewhat narrow limits. He has not, as in California, turned his attention to the building trade. He has not ousted our friend the washerwoman from her post; and only in rare cases has he taken to domestic service. His Building trade. He has not ousted our friend the washerwoman from her post; and only in rare cases has he taken to domestic service. His principal walk of life, no matter in what part of Australia he may be found, is in the vegetable line. In this he is facile princeps always, and the white grower of vegetables has to give way before him. In this respect "John" is a pioneer. Wherever he sets his foot, spade in hand, cabbages spring up and carrots strike their roots; so that he may even be looked upon as a benefactor. Yet while we buy his cabbages we do not thank him for growing them. In only one of the skilled industries—that of cabinet-making—has he seriously entered into competition with other classes of workmen in the colonies. In this, however, he has made considerable headway, and by his readiness this, however, he has made considerable headway, and by his readiness of imitation is giving proof of what he may be capable of in other directions. In the making of certain classes of furniture—of cheap, yet neat and durable articles—the Chinese in Sydney have an entire monopoly. Regarded, then, from the labour-market point of view, the Chinese in Australia are even more undesirable on account of their virtues than their vices. But no matter how the question is looked at by Australians, the interests of the community as a whole demand their exclusion; and, judging from the state of public feeling and opinion, their exclusion is inevitable.

A TOUR IN SIAM.

Mr. E. B. Gould forwards to the Marquis of Salisbury from Bangkok copy of a report compiled by Mr. W. J. Archer, Acting Vice-Consul at Chiengmai, of a journey made by that gentleman during the months of February and March, 1887, within his Vice-Consular district. The following extracts are made from the report, which is chiefly confined to a description of the country traversed and of the inhabitants, illustrated by three very useful route mans: trated by three very useful route maps:

"I did not propose to proceed northward beyond Chiengsen or eastward beyond the capital of Muang Nan, the farthest of the five States within this Vice-Consular district. The first part of the tour would thus comprise the northern frontier and the interesting Chiengmai Settlements close to it; the latter, the central Lao country and a portion of the Province of Nan, which had not yet been visited by the Vice-Consul.

Vice-Consul.

"Leaving Chiengmai on Feb. 2, my route lay almost directly north and close to the course of the Me Ping as far as Muang Ngai. Between the river and Doi Suchep, the lofty mountain that overlooks Chiengmai on the west, are numerous villages or isolated dwellings, with rich rice fields extending as far and even a short way beyond the Me Lim; this and the Me Teng, a larger river a little further north, are the principal affluents of the Me Ping from the mountainous country on the north-west. Soon after crossing the Me Lim, the cultivation gives way to a long tract of forest extending beyond the Me Teng as far as the plain of Chiengdao. With the exception of a few solitary hamlets this region appears to be uninhabited, but there is more cultivation, I believe, on the left bank, in the populous districts of Muang Ken and Muang Prao. Not far beyond the Me Teng the road lies up the course of the Me Ping; and here it becomes more difficult, but the scenery is far more picturesque. The river, not more than 60 feet broad, runs in many places at the foot of hills covered with rich vegetation, rising abruptly on both sides to a height of several hundred vegetation, rising abruptly on both sides to a height of several hundred feet. The numerous fords were now shallow, but in the height of the rainy season they doubtless often become impassable. A few small rainy season they doubtless often become impassable. A few small rapids present no serious obstacle to the passage of timber from the teak forests north, but impede navigation by boats above the junction of the Mc Teng. The abundance of fish in the Mc Ping was surprising. Dams are constructed across the river for purposes of irrigation, and sometimes are a cause of great vexation to traders, but no measures appear to be taken by the authorities for the proper protection or convenience of trading boats. The upper course of the Mc Ping lies across an extensive valley or plateau, bound on the west by the rocky mountains of Chiengdao, but little inferior in height to Doi Suthep, and by hills of far less elevation, and on the east by the continuation of the range that divides Chiengmai from Lakhon. It is a curious fact that the families of the unfortunate people who are accused of being 'phi ka,' or evil spirits, are usually banished from Chiengmai to Chiengdao; this is perhaps amongst the first signs of the policy of encouraging settlements on the frontier districts, which has since undergone such great development. Muang Ngai is evidently has since undergone such great development. Muang Ngai is evidently of later foundation, and the Lao Settlements scarcely extend further of later foundation, and the Lao Settlements scarcely extend further north. But settlers, mostly Ngios, have recently occupied Muang Pai to the west and Muang Na to the north-west. The route from Muang Ngai to Muang Fang crosses the chain of mountains which divides the basin of the Nam Khong, more commonly known as the Me Kong or Cambodia River, from that of the Me Ping. Passing through rich teak forests the path rises gradually, with only an occasionally steep ascent, until, towards the close of a long day's journey by elephant, the highest pass is reached, at an altitude of about 2,750 ft. After a steep declivity, the valley opens out into an extensive plateau, and on the face of a hill jutting out on it is the 'Tham Tab-tao,' a cave of great fame, to which pilgrimages are made from all parts of the country. It contains an altar where, as usual, offerings are made to numerous images of Buddha; for the Buddhists of this country hardly ever omit to erect a shrine at any spot where a natural marvel strikes the imagination with awe or wonder. The cave is large and probably of great depth, but, outside of its religious character, it has little attraction for a traveller, and the path leading to it is so rough that it

"About twenty miles of good and almost level road down the valley of the Me Fang leads to the capital or chief place of Muang Fang. The' province consists of the valley of the Me Fang, which is of considerable length, but narrow. The seat of Government of the settlement is a large village occupying the site of the old capital; the old ditch or embankment is still visible, and the ruins of numerous temples testify to the former importance of the city. It is said to have been destroyed about 170 years ago by the Burmese. I think, however, that the place was not entirely deserted till after the middle of the last century. That the valley of the Me Fang formerly contained a large population is proved by the most reliable evidence; the number of temples in ruins strewn close to both banks down to the junction with the Me Khok; and that the country was well cultivated is shown by the present stunted vegetation. But the land close to the river is said to be at present so subject to high floods that no cultivation is possible; this curious fact may be due to some impediment of recent formation in the lower coarse of the river. There is, however, still a large extent of country well suitable to cultivation, and labour alone is required to bring the province to its former state of prosstill a large extent of country well suitable to cultivation, and labour alone is required to bring the province to its former state of prosperity. I was told by some of the earlier settlers and by officials of the province that 'a former British Consul had purloined a number of Buddhas from the temples.' This remark referred to a European traveller who some years ago attempted to take away some of these images. The present population of the whole province of Muang Fang is probably under 2,000, and that of the capital about 500 or 600, and unless compulsion is used, the immigration of Laos from the neighbouring states is likely to be slow and gradual. This new capital Fang is prooably under 2,000, and onat of the capital about 500, and unless compulsion is used, the immigration of Laos from the neighbouring states is likely to be slow and gradual. This new capital was founded nine years ago, and has still the peculiar appearance of a new settlement. It is interesting to notice how these settlements are effected by the Laos, as it may illustrate the manner in which the present capitals of these states were founded within comparatively recent times. The site generally chosen for the future capital is close to or on the banks of the principal river, and it is of primary importance that the surrounding country should be a fertile plain well suitable to rice cultivation. The capitals of these provinces are, therefore, almost always situated in the midst of a flat, low country, but on ground sufficiently elevated to secure them from high floods. In the case of Muang Fang, however, the city lies at the foot of the hills on the Me Chan, and at a little distance from the Me Fang; this position was probably chosen in order to avoid the too heavy inundations of the river. Where the new settlement is on the site of a former city, the old embankment or wall, if any such remain, is kept as the boundary of the new town, and, in time, a wooden palisade, perhaps the old embankment or wall, if any such remain, is kept as the boundary of the new town, and, in time, a wooden palisade, perhaps about 12 feet high, is put up. The newcomers first reside in the capital, but as by degrees they have opportunities of becoming better acquainted with the surrounding country, they begin by cultivating the most promising land in the neighbourhood; others join them, and thus rilleges are founded thus villages are founded.

"The Colonies of Aliens in Siam form a characteristic of all the settlements in that country, both in the larger cities and in the provinces. In Bangkok the inhabitants of the different quarters have gradually become amalgamated, but not far from the capital the Colonies of former captives of war still retain their language and customs, and keep up little intercourse with their conquerors. In the toms, and keep up little intercourse with their conquerors. In the northern country the separation is as complete, and the town of Chiengmai, for instance, is divided into numerous quarters, inhabited almost exclusively by people of a different race; and many of the villages in the province are also colonies of refugees or captives. A settlement of this description entails considerable labour, and it is curious to note from what a distant source Muang Fang draws its labour supply. At the time of my visit to the province most of the hard work of clearing the jungle and preparing the soil for rice cultivation was done by a band of several hundred hired labourers. These men belong to a people called, by the Laos, Thai Yai, or 'Thai Lueng,' the inhabitants of the country tributary to China lying north of the Shan States, close to Yunnan and Burmah. They had followed the course of the Salween as far as Mchongson, the western frontier province of Chiengmai, and thence had come across country to Muang course of the Salween as far as Mchongson, the western frontier province of Chiengmai, and thence had come across country to Muang Fang. Some of them return to their country with only a year's earnings, but they are soon replaced by fresh arrivals. They are said to be better and hardier labourers than either Ngios or Laos, and they will probably be employed with advantage in the construction of public works in Burmah. Their language differs little from the Lao, but their dress resembles neither that of the Shans nor of the Laos. In my opinion the country of the Thai Yai (literally 'great Siamese'), or its vicinity, is the cradle of the Thai people, who have thence gradually flowed southward. The whole subject of the gradual development and modifications of the Thai race is a very interesting one from gradually flowed southward. The whole subject of the gradual development and modifications of the Thai race is a very interesting one from an ethnological point of view, and, in the absence of any records, I think is well worthy of research for the light it may throw on the early history of Indo-China. It is curious how the name of 'Thai,' or 'free,' is claimed by different branches of the family. It is only the Siamese that give the name of Lao to the people of these States, and, for some reason, the latter do not consider it at all complimentary, and for some reason, the latter do not consider it at all complimentary, and apply it only to the white-bellied people of the basin of the Nam Khong, beyond Muang Nan. These are, I believe, sometimes called 'Lao Yuen' by the Siamese; it is also curious that the Upper Shans designate the Laos as 'Yuen,' the Siamese name for the Anuamites. The Shans of the basin of the Salween call themselves, and are called by the Laos, 'Ngios.' The route from Muang Fang to Chiengsen was hardly ever used by the Laos before the recent settlements; and travellers from Chiengmai to Chiengsen still prefer to take the route through Chienghai. That by Muang Fang is no doubt longer, but has the advantage of greater coolness and abundance of elephant fodder and pasturage.

THE NEW SEASON'S TEAS.

The steamer Moyune, which is owned by the China Shippers' Mutual Steam Navigation Company, was docked in London at noon on the 25th inst., bringing from Hankow the first New Season's Tea. Considerable interest was of course manifested in her arrival, but the excitement amongst the traders who attended the first arrival a few years ago was entirely absent. The following is a synopsis of her run:—

•		_
Left Hankow	•••	•••	4 л.м.	•••	May 20
" Woosung	•••	•••	6 р.м.	•••	May 21
" Singapore	•••	•••	6.15 д.м.	•••	May 28
"Singapore Arrived at Suez	•••	•••	9.20 а.м.	•••	June 14
O	end	•••	10.15 а.м.	•••	June 25
Dooked Gravese			12 noon		June 95

There are some rather curious coincidences connected with the delivery of this season's New Teas. The Moyune, it will probably be recollected, brought home the first crop last year, and it is rather singular that she should have also maintained and it is rather singular that she should have also maintained the same dates at the principal ports of call during her voyage. In 1887 she left Hankow 5½ hours earlier than on the present occasion, and her times correspond at Woosung, Singapore, Suez, Gravesend, and finally London. If anything, however, this year's voyage has been the more expeditious, her time from Woosung being thirty-four days sixteen hours.

Of course it is very early to speak about the quality of the crop generally, but as far as we have seen they compare very favourably with last season's, being strong and full in the cup, and exceedingly well made in the leaf; one parcel of fine Kintuck bringing 2s. 2d. per lb. Ningchows are also well prepared, and a few parcels have been sold at about 1s. 4½d. to Kintuck bringing 2s. 2d. per lb. Ningehows are also well prepared, and a few parcels have been sold at about 1s. 4\forall d. to 1s. 9d. per lb. Lately, we have been told that China Tea will have to take quite a back place, but we are not of that opinion; and when we see Teas, like some of the fine descriptions of Kintuck and Ninchows of this season, showing so much care in the preparation of the leaf, we feel certain that a better time is in store for China Teas.

The second steamer, the Glengyle, passed Gibraltar on the 25th inst., and Dover at 8 a.m. to-day (the 29th). A long interval of twelve to fourteen days between her arrival and that of the next boat, the Ning Chow, should give the importers ample time to work off her cargo prior to the next boat's arrival.—London and China Express.

THE interesting observation is made by Dr. Underwood, Customs Medical Officer at Kiukiang, China, that the comparative immunity of the Chinese in that region from typhoid fever, notwithstanding that most of the conditions favouring it are present in abundance, may be attributed to the fact that "cold, unboiled water is rarely, or never, used when tea can be had."

THE CALCUTTA REVIEW.

(The only Quarterly Review in India.) ESTABLISHED 1844.

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Statesman, October 1886.

or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name —J. W. KAYE, Athenseum Club, June 23, 1872.

The Calcutta R view has given us valuable articles on the army. Sen e from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophesy, of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.—Address of the C.-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

... The Calcuta Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westmineter

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the ligh character of its articles, the independent course of its staif of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of flustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

Inventions.

ments."
"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the FrenSh, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

"VOICE OF INDIA." THE

TO THE UBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing moximity (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian beople.

ing between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian beople.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative, and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to fournalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

Wanted agents, at home and abroad, to obtain orders for watches and jewellery on our new instalment system, by weekly or monthly payments. Most beneficial to subscribers and agents, as money paid for rent of showy shops and shopmen are thus saved to members joining our instalment system. Also trustworthy men wanted in every ship, regiment, and battery to act as agents, to enable naval and military men to secure good, reliable watches at a small profit above the actual cost. Naval and military agents when leaving the service, desirous of being appointed district agents or travellers, are invited to apply for the post. Means of earning good income were never before placed so easily in the reach of intelligent, energetic naval or military men leaving the service. Terms on application.
